Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence at what time Northwood first learnt of the visual contact which HMS Conqueror had established with the General Belgrano.

Mr. Stanley: On the afternoon of 1 May 1982.

Messrs. Aish and Co.

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Defence what sums he has received from Messrs. Aish and Company in respect of overcharging on defence contracts.

Mr. Lee: Contractual arrangements between the Ministry of Defence and its suppliers are commercially confidential.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Seat Belts

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the present assessment of the results in Northern Ireland of the introduction of compulsory seat belts; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: In the 21 months of compulsory seat belt wearing to 31 October 1984, 47 (41·2 per cent.) fewer drivers and 38 (38·8 per cent.) fewer passengers were killed, and 196 (4·2 per cent.) fewer drivers and 177 (4 per cent.) fewer passengers were injured, than in the previous 21 months. This reduction in casualties is gratifying and underlines the benefits of seat belt wearing for drivers and passengers.

Surveys indicate a seat belt wearing rate of 90 per cent.

Housing Executive

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many complaints of discrimination and maladministration by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive have been lodged with the ombudsman; how many of these complaints were made by (a) Protestants and (b) Roman Catholics; and in how many cases it was found that discrimination and maladministration had occurred.

Dr. Boyson: The available information is contained in the Commissioner for Complaints annual reports, copies of which are available in the Library.

Rates

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what are the maximum and minimum weekly and annual sums paid in respect of rates for the following dwellings owned by the Housing Executive (a) one-bedroom bungalows, (b) two-bedroom bungalows, (c) two-bedroom houses, (d) three-bedroom houses, (e) four-bedroom houses and (f) rural cottages.

Mr. Chris Patten: This information is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Social Security Benefits

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will list, for the latest convenient date, the number of children in Northern Ireland for whom social security benefits are paid, and indicate the amount paid in respect of each child or age band and the total for the last financial year and the expected totals for 1984;

(2) how many persons, other than children, at the latest convenient date were in receipt of each social security benefit in Northern Ireland; and what were the sums paid in respect of each benefit in the last financial year and the expected outturn for the present year.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information requested is not readily available and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. Estimates of the average numbers receiving the main benefits at any one time are, however, given in table 2.17.20 of "The Government's Expenditure Plans" of February 1984—Cmnd. 9143–II.

Salmon

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what information he has as to the number of salmon which were taken by anglers in each stretch of the river Bush in each year since 1973 to the latest available date by (a) fly, (b) prawn, (c) worm and (d) spinning;

(2) how many salmon and grilse were taken by the fish trap on the river Bush at Bushmills in each year since 1973 for stripping; how many salmon parr were produced from those fish in each year; where they were used for restocking; how many salmon nets were counted in the Bush system in each of those years; and what was the estimated production of parr from those redds;

(3) if he will publish a table in the Official Report to show how many salmon and grilse passed through the salmon trap on the river bank at Bushmills in each month in each year since 1973, the total for each year, the number of fish taken and sold by the Department of Agriculture in each year, the sums realised from any such sales annually and the average size of the salmon and grilse ascending the river in each year.

Dr. Boyson: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to the age of salmon fry at their migration from Northern Ireland rivers; and how this compares with other river systems in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the Irish Republic, (c) Norway, (d) France, (e) Canada and (f) the United States of America.

Dr. Boyson: Information on the age of salmon fry at their migration is available in Northern Ireland only in respect of the river Bush, where it is one to two years. While there may be some published information in respect of the other countries listed, this could be extracted in a form suitable for meaningful comparison only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what reports he has received, and what research he has carried out, into the effects of the County Donegal offshore salmon fishery on salmon stocks in (a) the Foyle system, (b) the Bann system and (c) the other salmon rivers in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Boyson: A programme of work using micro-tagging techniques commenced in 1983 on the river Bush. This will be a long-term study which may throw light on the effects of the Co. Donegal offshore salmon fishing. While there were some returns of tagged fish in 1984 an analysis of these returns is not yet available. No recent comparable research has been undertaken on stocks from the Foyle and Bann systems.

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list in the Official Report (a) the catchment area of each salmon river in Northern Ireland in square miles, (b) the minimum flow expected and (c) the mean flow expected in cusecs and the maximum flow under flood conditions.

Dr. Boyson: The following information relates to those salmon rivers for which flow data are available:

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether any angling clubs in (a) the Foyle Fisheries Commission area and (b) the Fisheries Conservation Board area make available to those two bodies details of any records regarding catches by anglers in respect of (i) salmon and grilse and (ii) sea trout; and how the success rate revealed by any such records compares with the angling catch reported directly by licence holders to the licence issuing authorities.

Dr. Boyson: No.

Civil Service (Information System)

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland when he expects to publish the details of the information system on the composition of the Northern Ireland Civil Service which he announced on 4 December, Official Report, column 97.

Dr. Boyson: Questionnaires will be issued to non-industrial staff in the Northern Ireland Civil Service in January 1985 to establish whether individuals have been Protestant educated or Roman Catholic educated; this is the only significant piece of data required for equal opportunities monitoring which is not already held in respect of members of the Northern Ireland Civil Service. It is expected that the first report based on the equal opportunities information system will be published about mid-1986.

Fishery Station, Bushmills

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will indicate whether and when he intends to publish a comprehensive report of the work carried out to date by the Department of Agriculture fishery station at Bushmills.

Dr. Boyson: No. Details are, however, published in the annual report on research and technical work of the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland. Fourteen scientific papers relating to various aspects of the work have also been published in scientific journals.

Rivers (Acidity)

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has on increasing acidity of rivers in Northern Ireland; and what rivers have been the worst affected.

Mr. Chris Patten: Regular water quality monitoring undertaken by the Department of the Environment for Northern Ireland has shown no evidence of increasing acidity.

Roads

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what sums have been expended in each year since 1978 in each road division in Northern Ireland on (a) capital works and (b) maintenance.

Mr. Chris Patten: The information is as follows:

Financial year	Roads Service Division
	Ballymena £ million	Belfast £ million	Coleraine £ million	Craigavon £ million	Downpatrick £ million	Omagh £ million
(a) Capital works:
1978-79	3·3	5·3	7·6	4·4	5·6	5·4

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland

(1) what proportion of urban roads in the Province are lit; and by what form of electric lighting;

(2) what proportion of group A roads in Northern Ireland are lit; and by what form of electric lighting.

Mr. Chris Patten: I shall reply to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

River Bush (Angling Permits)

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what sums are collected in licence fees in respect of each of (a) the new stretch, (b) the special stretch and (c) leap or restricted stretch of the river Bush fishery in each year since 1973 until the latest available date.

Dr. Boyson: Since licence fees are not levied on the basis of individual fisheries, it is assumed that the information required relates to the revenue from the daily angling permits issued by the Department of Agriculture for Northern Ireland. This information is published annually in the report on the Sea and Inland Fisheries of Northern Ireland. The figures for the 1984 angling season, which have not yet been published, are as follows:

New Stretch*	1,781·00
Town or special Stretch	3,177·15
Leap or restricted Stretch	1,155·95

* An additional stretch of the river acquired by the Department for angling in 1984.

Births (Registration)

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement outlining the policy regarding the use of Irish names by parents registering the birth of children in the Registrar General's offices in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Chris Patten: There is no separate policy on the use of Irish names. In all cases the final decision about the names and spelling of names must be made by the informant and that spelling must be inserted on the registration form.

Irish Language

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has given consideration to the position of the Irish language in Northern Ireland; and if he will consider whether, in respect of the numbers using, learning or acquainted with that language, legislation similar to the Welsh Language Act 1967 should be brought forward.

Mr. Hurd: The Government wish to provide adequate support to those who seek to use Irish and preserve their cultural heritage — and already do so through the education system—but are not persuaded that the legal status suggested would be an appropriate reflection of the position of Irish in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consideration he has given to applying in Northern Ireland the principles set out in the resolutions and reports adopted by the European Parliament on the rights of people respecting minority languages and cultures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurst: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Legislation (Repeal)

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give consideration to bringing forward legislation to repeal section 234 of the Settlement of Ireland Act 1665, section 19 of the Public Health and Local Government (Miscellaneous Provisions) Act (Northern Ireland) 1949 and sections 1, 2 and 5 of the Administration of Justice (Language) Act (Ireland) 1737.

Mr. Hurd: The Government have no plans to change the legislation in the question, but we are giving consideration to the issues raised by the hon. Gentleman's question.

Mentally Handicapped Persons

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will improve the provision of resources for adult training centres and social education centres for the mentally handicapped in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Chris Patten [pursuant to his reply, 17 December 1984, c. 63]: There are at present 2,129 training centre places available for mentally handicapped adults in Northern Ireland. There are a further 271 places in planning or under construction. The provision of adult training centres is a priority within the mental handicap programme and the Department's regional strategic plan. Additional places will be provided as resources permit.

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the provision of sheltered employment for the mentally handicapped in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Chris Patten [pursuant to his reply, 17 December 1984, c. 63]: I understand that 79 mentally handicapped people are currently employed in three village communities run by the Glencraig trust. The communities are substantially grant-aided by the Government and are expected to expand their work force to 100 in 1985. In Ulster Sheltered Employment Ltd., 23 out of 135 severely disabled workers are mentally handicapped. Of these, 14 have been placed in sheltered industrial groups within host companies throughout Northern Ireland, where they work alongside the able-bodied and receive the same wages and conditions of service.

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the Government's attitude to and role in the dispute in the Western Board area arising from the sole deployment of young help workers as day centre bus assistants and the ICTU directive; and if he will suggest to the board that it employs full staff members to assist those using the buses or redeploy care assistants on short hours to do this work with the support of young help workers.

Mr. Chris Patten [pursuant to his reply, 17 December 1984, c. 63]: The Government regret this dispute, which is having the effect of depriving young people of an opportunity to do useful work and depriving the elderly and the handicapped of valuable assistance. The deployment of permanent staff and young help volunteers by the Western Health and Social Services Board is a matter for the board.

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement outlining the nature and extent of current provision for the mentally handicapped in Northern Ireland, what the Government's aims and objectives are in making such provision and whether he is satisfied that this provision will meet those objectives.

Mr. Chris Patten [pursuant to his reply, 17 December 1984, c. 63]: The Department of Health and Social Services and health and social services boards seek to meet the needs of mentally handicapped people in Northern Ireland through the provision of adult training centres, schools for mentally handicapped children, residential homes together with appropriate medical, nursing, paramedical and social work services. Hospital services are provided for those mentally handicapped people who require specialist medical and nursing care.

Details of the policy in respect of mentally handicapped people in Northern Ireland together with further information on actual and planned service provision and the type of development envisaged for the future are contained in the minutes of evidence of the Social Services Select Committee on community care.

Gas Supplies

Mr. Nicholson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what costs have been incurred to date as a result of the plans, now discarded by Her Majesty's Government, to bring gas to Northern Ireland from the Republic of Ireland.

Dr. Boyson [pursuant to his reply, 17 December 1984, c. 611]: Up to the end of November, expenditure totalling £5,969,000 has been incurred.

Plastic Bullets

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many members of the security forces in the current year, and for each of the last five years, have been (a) charged with criminal offences or (b) disciplined as a result of incidents in Northern Ireland involving injuries to persons caused by the use of plastic bullets.

Mr. Hurd [pursuant to his reply, 10 December 1984, c. 349]: Between 1 January 1979 and 30 November 1984 no member of the Royal Ulster Constabulary was charged with a criminal offence or disciplined as a result of an incident involving injuries caused by a plastic baton round.

I understand that the Army does not maintain information in the form requested and that it could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Lear Fan Ltd.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether his officials have had any recent discussions with Lear Fan Ltd. about future funding; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Boyson: Discussions have been taking place with the private sector investors who entered into a financial commitment to Lear Fan Ltd. in 1982 about the future funding of the project.

Agreement in principle has been reached that Zoysia Corporation, the private sector consortium, will make a substantial additional sum of money available to the company. This is a welcome sign of the investors' confidence in the project and of their confidence in Northern Ireland.

A project which started out being heavily dependent on public funds, has moved through the 1982 agreement, when the new funding was on the basis of £2 from the private sector for every £1 put up by the Government, to a stage when all the new funding now proposed is to come from the private sector. The Government's remaining commitment under the legally binding 1982 agreement consists of $9·14 million of further funding and a loan guarantee of $15 million. The overall size of the project has been reduced significantly and the planned number of jobs in Northern Ireland has been adjusted in consequence from the 1982 prospective figure of some 2,800 to a new and more realistic figure of 1,100. The company's finances are being restructured to reflect the smaller size of the project now planned and to enable the private sector to make its further investment. Central to the agreement is the prospect of the Government's overall financial exposure to the project being reduced and the confirmation of Northern Ireland as the base for the principal manufacturing facility.

It is my hope that the agreement in principle will be implemented quickly so that the work in the Northern Ireland factories can be restarted as soon as possible.

Airports (Privatisation)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he has come to any decision regarding the privatisation of Northern Ireland Airports Ltd.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Chris Patten: I have at present no proposal to privatise Northern Ireland Airports Ltd.

Flags and Emblems Act 1954

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people have been found guilty of an offence under the Flags and Emblems Act 1954 in Northern Ireland in each of the last 15 years; and how many have been (a) given a prison sentence and (b) fined.

Mr. Scott: None.

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people have been charged with offences under the Flags and Emblems Act 1954 in each of the last 15 years in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Scott: Information in the form required is not readily available and could be compiled only at disproportionate cost.

Prisoners (Statistics)

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement listing all prisoners in Northern Ireland currently remanded in custody detailing where they are held, how long they have been on remand, what charges they face, whether they have served any previous periods on remand and the charges that face them, whether they have served any previous periods in prison and the number of court appearances they have made in respect of the charges on which they are remanded.

Mr. Scott: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Trials

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the delays in bringing cases to trial in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Scott: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will give consideration to the introduction of a legal time limit on bringing cases to trial in Northern Ireland similar to that in Scotland and currently proposed for England and Wales.

Mr. Hurd: I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply which I gave to the hon. Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham) on 6 December 1984, at column 229.

Detained Persons

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the time served in custody on remand by people charged with offences under emergency legislation in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Scott: I shall reply to the hon. Gentleman as soon as possible.

Strip Searches

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on his policy for strip-searching prisoners at Her Majesty's prison, Armagh.

Mr. Scott: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Messrs Danny Doherty and William Fleming

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether warrants for the arrest of Mr. Danny Doherty and Mr. William Fleming had been issued at the time of their being killed by the British security forces.

Mr. Hurd: No.

Housing

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many houses were built or completed in (a) the private sector and (b) the public sector in Northern Ireland in each year since 1954; and what is the estimate for 1985.

Mr. Chris Patten [pursuant to his reply, 17 December 1984, c. 59]: The available information is contained in the housing returns for Northern Ireland for the periods from December 1954 to end December 1968, the "Digest of Housing Statistics for Northern Ireland" for the period end December 1968 to end September 1973 and the Northern Ireland housing statistics publications for the period end September 1973 to end December 1983; statistics for 1984 will be published in mid-1985. The public expenditure allocations for housing in 1985-86, which I announced on 13 December 1984, assume that 2,250 new dwellings will be started by the Northern Ireland Housing Executive and almost 1,000 by registered housing associations. No precise estimates have been made of new house building starts or completions in the private sector in 1985, although I look forward to the continuation of the current levels of activity.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Dental Services

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what response he sent to the British Dental Association in answer to its letter of last June calling for an immediate tightening up of the system for monitoring dental work done and claims submitted to the Dental Estimates Board; and whether action has been taken since June to put into effect its proposals;

(2) what response was sent to the British Dental Association in answer to its letter of July 1982 proposing a 50 per cent. expansion in the number of regional dental officers.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have explained to the British Dental Association that the staffing of the dental reference service has to be considered in the context of the Government's policy to reduce Civil Service manpower. We are satisfied that the present numbers of dental officers, taken in conjunction with other methods of monitoring, are sufficient to provide reasonable checks on the quality of dental treatment.

The most important single step which can be taken to improve the monitoring carried out by the Dental Estimates Board is the purchase of a new computer. We expect to make an announcement on this shortly.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) to what factors he attributes the increase in the number of homeless supplementary benefit claimants staying in bed and breakfast accommodation;

(2) if he will give the increase in each of the last five years in the number of homeless supplementary benefit claimants staying in bed and breakfast accommodation.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that separate records are not maintained on whether supplementary benefit claimants entered ordinary board and lodging accommodation because of homelessness or other factors. I would refer my hon. Friend to my reply on 14 December to the hon. Member for Islington, South and Finsbury (Mr. Smith) at column 661-2 for information on the number of supplementary benefit claimants living in ordinary board and lodging accommodation since 1979. There is no simple explanation for the increased number in recent years of ordinary board and lodging cases which reflects more than the increase in the overall number of supplementary benefit recipients. Recent evidence indicates that an important factor has been that some landlords and some claimants, particularly the younger age groups, have found board and lodging payments financially attractive.

Sir Brandon Rhys-Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what proportion of people retiring with the benefit of annuities from occupational pension schemes currently qualify for supplementary benefit immediately upon retirement;

(2) what proportion of people over 70 years of age and in receipt of annuities from occupational pension schemes currently qualify for supplementary benefit; and what is the corresponding proportion of people over 80 years of age;

(3) how many pensioners currently receiving annuities from occupational pension schemes are also in receipt of supplementary benefit.

Mr. Whitney: It is estimated that at December 1982 some 282,000 supplementary pensioners were also in receipt of an occupational pension. I regret that information is not readily available of the numbers of recipients in the respective age groups or of those who qualify for supplementary pension immediately on retirement.

Health Expenditure

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the most recent figures for the distribution of health expenditure for each English region, expressed in per capita terms and categorised according to (a) hospital services expenditure, (b) community health and family practitioners' services expenditure and (c) total expenditure.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The figures for 1983-84 are as follows:

Region	Hospital Service Expenditure £	Community Health and Family Practitioner services £	Other services expenditure £	Total expenditure by Health Authorities £
Northern	155·25	76·63	21·18	253·06

All Regions	157·88	76·47	20·33	254·68

Notes:

1. The expenditure figures used are taken from the annual accounts submitted to the Department by regional and district health authorities.
2. Other services expenditure includes the cost of the ambulance, blood transfusion, mass radiography and various other services and headquarters administration.
3. The figures do not include the cost of certain services provided centrally (for example, by the Dental Estimates Board and the Prescription Pricing Authority); nor expenditure incurred by the London Postgraduate special health authorities and preserved boards of governors.
4. The figures will reflect regional influences, the major one being the effect of London weighting allowance in the four Thames regions.
5. Family practitioner committee expenditure has been included in the region of the health authority which accounts for that expenditure. However, a few family practitioner committees' catchment areas straddle regional boundaries and will have marginally distorted some of the figures.
6. The population figures used are the mid-year estimates of resident population for 1983, the latest available.

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to inform people who are now receiving medicines which will not be prescribable as National Health Service items after 1 April 1985 of the sums they will have to pay if they wish to continue with such medicines.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We propose to produce a list of drugs prescribable on the NHS which will meet all clinical needs so there will be no medical reason for any patient to require another medicine. The retail prices of medicines are a matter for the drugs industry and pharmacists and other suppliers.

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the representations he has had from organisations and individuals in the medical profession claiming lack of consultation with them prior to his making available his intention to bring forward limited list prescribing.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: 362 of the 671 representations received to date from medical bodies and individual doctors are copies of a circular letter prepared by Roche Products Ltd. which raises the question of prior consultation.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what consultations he had with the Royal College of General Practitioners before imposing the limited list of drugs available for prescription on the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We did not consult the Royal College of General Practitioners before reaching a decision, based on our detailed investigations of the experience of other countries, on the principle of the limited list. We have however invited the college to discuss with us the contents of the proposed list.

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what advice he took (a) from within the United Kingdom, and (b) from outside the United Kingdom in formulating his proposals for a limited list of drugs.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 11 December at columns 464-65.

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how he intends to prevent the saving of the order of £100 million which he expects to make as a result of his proposals to limit the range of drugs prescribable under the National Health Service being eroded by price increases elsewhere consistent with the pharmaceutical price regulation scheme.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Portsmouth, South (Mr. Hancock) on 4 December, at c. 168. Any application for price increases will be looked at very critically.

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what criteria will determine whether or not a drug is included in the list of drugs it is proposed to leave prescribable under the National Health Service in each of the therapeutic groups affected by his announcement of 8 November.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The drugs to remain available on the National Health Service in the categories affected by our limited list proposals will not be finalised until full consultation has taken place. Our stated intention is to provide an adequate range of cheap and effective generic drugs in each of the categories covered.

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied that his proposals to limit the range of drugs prescribable under the National Health Service comply with the recent ruling of the European Court of Justice on this matter.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We will ensure that the way our proposals are implemented accords with European Community legislation.

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what evidence his Department gave to the Greenfield committee on limited drugs lists.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: A paper prepared by officials of our Department and put to the Greenfield committee in 1981 rejected the idea of a limited list of drugs across all therapeutic groups. It did not consider the present proposals which affect only the less essential therapeutic categories.

Sickness Benefit

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the latest available figures for (a) the total number of sickness benefit recipients, (b) of these the number receiving supplementary benefit, (c) a breakdown of recipients by their previous employment status, (d) the number of recipients claiming for an adult dependant and (e) the number of recipients claiming for a child dependant.

Mr. Whitney: The following is the information:

(a) The total number of sickness benefit beneficiaries as at 2 April 1983, the latest date for which information is available, was 338,000.

(b) The total number of sickness benefit beneficiaries also in receipt of supplementary benefit as at 8 December 1982, the latest date for which information is available, was 25,000.

(c) A breakdown of sickness benefit beneficiaries by their former employment status as at 2 April 1983 was—

	Number
Employed persons	290,000
Self-employed persons	17,000
Others	31,000

(d) The number of sickness benefit beneficiaries claiming an increase for an adult dependant as at 2 April 1983 was 83,000.

(e) The number of sickness benefit beneficiaries claiming an increase for a child dependant as at 2 April 1983 was 71,000 but this total includes 38,000 beneficiaries who also claimed for an adult dependant and are included in the figure shown at (d) above.

Sick Pay

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the latest available figures for (a) the total number of statutory sick pay recipients, (b) of these the number also receiving supplementary benefit, (c) a breakdown of statutory sick pay recipients according to (i) whether they are single or married and (ii) which of the rates of statutory sick pay they are receiving, (d) the proportion of recipients qualifying for sickness benefit at the end of their eight weeks on statutory sick pay, and (e) the proportion of people falling sick who receive (i) statutory sick pay, (ii) sickness benefit and (iii) supplementary benefit for the first eight weeks of sickness.

Mr. Whitney: I regret the information is not yet available. Information on (a) will not be available until about the end of 1985. Items (b) and (e) cannot be fully answered until (a) is available. Information on (d) should be available about mid-1985. Information on (c) is not being collected.

Benefit Applicants

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the number of individuals in the last year in (a) Merseyside and (b) Knowsley who have had applications for benefit turned down and the number of renewals of benefit refused at medical appeal tribunals; and what was the percentage in each case of total applicants.

Mr. Newton: I regret the information is not available in the form requested. The table gives details of the number of decisions made under the industrial injuries scheme by the medical appeal tribunal for the Merseyside region in 1983.

Cases come before the tribunal on appeal by the claimant or reference on behalf of the Secretary of State. The tribunal decides cases where no assessment of disablement has been made and cases where the amount of the assessment is being challenged. A Tribunal's decision which is unfavourable to the claimant does not necessarily mean that entitlement is extinguished.

	Number	Percentage of total number
Number of appeals and references decided	879	—
Decision
Favourable to claimant	468	53
Unfavourable to claimant	53	6
Not changed	358	41

I regret that similar information is not available for mobility allowance cases which can also be referred to medical appeal tribunals.

Blind and Partially Sighted Persons

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people are registered blind or partially sighted at present in (a) Greater Manchester, (b) the city of Manchester, (c) the borough of Trafford and (d) the Stretford constituency.

Mr. Tony Newton: Information is not available centrally for all the areas mentioned. The latest available information, which relates to the position at 31 March 1982, is as follows:

Numbers of registered blind and partially sighted persons

	Blind	Partially sighted	Combined Totals
Metropolitan County of Greater Manchester	6,861	4,121	10,982
Metropolitan District of Manchester	1,554	1,238	2,792
Metropolitan District of Trafford	567	323	890

NHS Expenditure

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what was the amount spent on the National Health Service per head of the population for the whole of the United Kingdom and per head of the working population for 1983-84.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Net spending on the National Health Service for the whole of the United Kingdom for 1983-84 excluding charges to patients, was about £285 per head of population; when spread over the working population, including the unemployed, this net spending amounted to some £605 per head.

Supplementary Benefit (Postal Procedures)

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will place in the Library a copy of "Monitoring the Pilot Exercise to Test the Extension of Supplementary Benefit Postal Procedures".

Mr. Whitney: I refer the hon. Member to the reply of my hon. Friend the Member for Brent, North (Dr. Boyson) to my hon. Friend, the Member for Brighton, Kemptown (Mr. Bowden) on 4 June at column 27.

Hip Replacement Operation

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many National Health Service patients have received hip replacements each year since 1979; what was the average cost of each operation performed; and how many National Health Service patients are currently awaiting hip replacements.

Mr. John Patten: Waiting list information is available centrally by the specialty of treatment and not by operation. The available information on operations performed is given in the table.

Estimated number of operations for total hip replacement and other arthroplasty of hip in NHS hospitals in England

Year	Estimated number
1980	33,420
1981	34,780
1982*	33,730

* In-patient activity was generally depressed by industrial action in the NHS during 1982.

The average cost of a hip replacement operation is estimated as some £2,700.

Measles Immunisation

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what level of funding he plans to allocate to district health authorities to enable them to raise the level of provision of measles immunisation to all susceptible children entering pre-school playgroups, nursery schools and primary schools.

Mr. John Patten: When we launched our initiative to increase take-up of measles immunisation in July, health authorities were advised that any additional expenditure resulting from it should be met from within their existing revenue allocations.

Hospital Building

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of newly built National Health Service hospitals in the last 10 years were designed by (a) regional architects and (b) private firms.

Mr. John Patten: Information in this form is not held centrally by the Department. Records are available for about 350 projects each costing over £1 million designed during this period which indicate that 32 per cent. were designed by regional architects and 68 per cent. by private firms.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many old hospital buildings are scheduled to be remodelled during the next three years; and what level of funding will be allocated for this purpose.

Mr. John Patten: The decision to undertake the remodelling of an existing health building is taken by individual health authorities against a background of locally determined policies and priority. Since the projects usually fall below the financial limit which would require prior agreement with the Department, no record of either the numbers of buildings involved or related funding is held centrally.

Hospitals (Energy Consumption)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidelines his Department has issued to hospitals about reducing energy consumption; and to what extent energy use in hospitals has decreased resulting from such guidelines.

Mr. John Patten: The Department has issued guidelines and produced performance indicators that will enable hospitals to monitor their energy consumption and establish targets for reducing it. It has also published articles regularly in NHS and other journals on energy saving methods applicable to the NHS.

The NHS in England and Wales is currently realising savings estimated at £68 million a year but it is not possible to determine the proportion directly attributable to the Department's guidance.

"Underused and Surplus Property in the National Health Service"

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what reaction he has had from health authorities arising from the report published by his Department entitled "Underused and Surplus Property in the National Health Service"; and if any of them have taken steps to implement recommendations issued in it.

Mr. John Patten: In general health authorities have reacted favourably to the recommendations of the report. All authorities are required to implement the report's principal recommendations and generally good progress is being made towards this.

Income Tax (Single Person's Allowance)

Mr. Watts asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what would be the cost of raising the national insurance contribution's lower earnings limit to the level of the single person's personal allowance for income tax.

Mr. Whitney: The cost of raising the lower earnings limit for national insurance contributions to £38·40 (the weekly equivalent of the single person's personal tax allowance) would be £20 million in 1984-85. This figure assumes the upper earnings limit would be unchanged.

Heating Allowance

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many unemployed people in receipt of supplementary benefit receive the heating allowance; and what this figure represents as a percentage of the total unemployed supplementary benefit population.

Mr. Whitney: Provisional estimates suggest that in December 1983 about 600,000 unemployed people were receiving supplementary benefit heating additions; this represents about 33 per cent. of the number of unemployed people we estimate were receiving supplementary benefit in December 1983.

Furniture Grants

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people on, or entitled to, supplementary benefit have been refused furniture grants in each year since 1980 at the benefit offices in Stockport and Tameside.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that this information is not available.

Child Benefit

Mr. Squire asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide a table showing the combined value of child tax allowance after clawback and family allowances on child benefit for each year from 1954 to 1984 expressed at November 1983 prices and at 1984 prices for the first, second, third and each subsequent child aged under 11 years, 11 to 16 years and over 16 years in standard rate tax-paying families.

Mr. Whitney: Table 1 gives the value of child support over the years in question, to standard rate taxpayers, at November 1983 prices and table 2 shows the comparable figures at November 1984 prices. Figures for children aged 11 to 15 and 16 and over have been given: those for children aged 11 to 16 and over 16 are not readily available.

Nursing Homes (Lambeth)

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has to establish nursing homes for the elderly under the National Health Service in or about Lambeth.

Mr. John Patten: Health authorities in South-East Thames region are drawing up their strategic plans for health service developments over the next 10 years. I suggest the hon. Member seek this information from the chairmen of West Lambeth and Camberwell health authorities.

Aspirin and Paracetamol

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the known side effects of aspirin and paracetamol.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

EC (Drugs Costs)

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the cost per person per day of drugs prescribed in each of the European Community member states.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I regret that we do not know of any source for this information.

Harrow Health Centre

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has recently visited, or intends to visit, the Harrow health centre.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I visited both the centre and a National Health Service practice in Harrow on 4 December.

Heating Additions

Mr. David Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will amend the regulations governing the operation of estate rate heating additions so as to provide that in the case of submissions which are approved, benefit is payable for the date of submission rather than the date of approval.

Mr. Whitney: The basis of our policy is set out in my reply to the hon. Member for Greenock and Port Glasgow (Dr. Godman) on 19 November at column 70 and we have no plans at present to amend the regulations.

Invalidity Pensions

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many invalidity pensioners receive the additional earnings-related component; how much the average addition is; and what steps his Department takes to ensure claimants know of this addition.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Housing Benefit

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is planning to ensure that local authorities are consistent with each other in applying disregards to rent and rebate schemes for war disablement and war pensions.

Mr. Whitney: The Housing Benefits Regulations 1982, provide for the first £4 of a war widow's or war disablement pension to be disregarded when assessing entitlement to housing benefits. Under regulation 4 local authorities have the power to make a local scheme modifying the statutory provisions. Some authorities use that power to give a higher disregard for war widows' and war disablement pensions. We have no plans to change these or any other provisions of the housing benefit scheme which have not already been announced until we have considered the report of the independent review of the scheme.

Mr. Michael Martin

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has yet decided whether to hold an inquiry into the circumstances surrounding the death earlier this year of a patient, Mr. Michael Martin, in Broadmoor hospital; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Yes. I have asked Miss S. A. Ritchie, QC, to inquire into this matter and to report to me. The terms of reference of the inquiry will be:

"To inquire into the circumstances surrounding the incident on 6 July 1984 involving Mr. Michael Martin, a patient at Broadmoor Hospital, following which he was found dead; to consider the care and treatment accorded to Mr. Martin before and during his seclusion on 6 July; to report conclusions relating to this matter; and, in the light of those conclusions, to recommend any action that should be taken in relation to patient care".

Advice on clinical questions will be provided by an independent doctor and nurse. We are seeking the views of professional bodies on suitable persons to undertake that task. I expect, in due course, to publish the results of the inquiry.

RHAs (Appointments)

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will announce details of the appointments and re-appointments made to the membership of regional health authorities since 1 October.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The chairmen and members of the regional health authorities, including those members appointed or reappointed from 1 October 1984 are as follows:

Paediatric Medicines (Sweeteners)

Mr. Charles Morrison asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his policy towards the use of sweeteners in paediatric medicines; what sweeteners are currently approved by his Department and used in manufacture; and how their use is reviewed.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: [pursuant to the reply, 3 December 1984, c. 81.]: There is no comprehensive list of sweeteners approved by the licensing authority for use in medicinal products since all non-active ingredients are evaluated as components of the individual products containing them. The following are the main substances contained in currently licensed medicinal products as sweeteners: sodium cyclamate, saccharin sodium, honey, calcium cyclamate, sorbital solution 70 per cent. syrup, calcium saccharin, saccharin, acesulfame potassium, brown sugar, golden syrup, saccharin sodium-anhydrous, karion 83, feculose, ammoniated glyclyrrhizin, compressible sugar, saccharin solution, celutab, puratose K, aspartame, liquid sugar demineralised, dextrates, liquid sugar gran liquors, hydrogenated glucose syrup.

In deciding whether to licence products containing sweeteners, a number of product-related factors are considered, for example, the pharmaceutical form of the product, the route of administration, the other ingredients, the indications for use and the recommended dosage. The safety of all medicinal products is monitored by the Committee on Safety of Medicines and the other Committees set up under the Medicines Act who would advise us if there was a problem related to a particular sweetener.

We have received expert advice that the long-term use of sweeteners containing sucrose in paediatric medicines can cause severe tooth decay and a warning to doctors about this has been included in the British National Formulary. We are encouraged that a number of manufactures have been able to eliminate sucrose from their paediatric medicines.

Postgraduate Hospitals

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give figures for the London postgraduate hospitals that had their own board of governors before reorganisation, showing the revenue and capital available to each in the last year before reorganisation, and that available in the current year; what was the percentage charge for each; and which are run by special health authorities and which by district health authorities.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to the reply, 11 December 1984, c. 475]: The table shows the revenue cash limits allotted to each of the London postgraduate teaching hospitals for the financial years 1981-82 and 1984-85 and the percentage increase over the period, together with the capital cash limits for these years which reflect the hospitals' capital programmes. Details of the status of their present managing authorities are also set out in the table.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Printing Industry

5. Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the future prospects of the printing industry.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The future prospects of the printing industry lie very largely in the hands of those who work in it. A recent study commissioned by the Printing Industries EDC, on which representatives of management, Government and the unions sit, identified a number of weaknesses which the industry needs to tackle quickly if it is to compete effectively against foreign competition.

British Telecom

11. Mr. Bruce asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what studies his Department carried out prior to the flotation of British Telecom as to the likely nature and level of demand for shares; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: A programme of market research was undertaken in the months before the flotation to help assess the likely public demand for shares; and discussions were held by the Department's advisers with financial institutions in order to assess the institutional demand.

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the criteria and circumstances under which the Government will use their shareholding to influence decisions take by British Telecom.

Mr. Butcher: I have nothing to add to the statement in the prospectus:

"Her Majesty's Government does not intend to use its rights as an ordinary shareholder to intervene in the commercial decisions of British Telecom".

Share Ownership

15. Mr. Hayes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to encourage greater employee participation through the ownership of shares.

Mr. Fletcher: We have just completed the biggest single step so far this century towards wider ownership of shares in British industry. Over 2 million people purchased BT shares, including many first-time investors and 184,000 employees of BT itself. We will continue to encourage wider ownership of shares both by employees and by individual investors.

52. Mr. Jessel asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the Government's policy towards the encouragement of wider share ownership.

Mr. Fletcher: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for High Peak (Mr. Hawkins). The Government have taken a number of steps to encourage wider share ownership through the privatisation programme and through the measures taken by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer on the tax treatment of share option schemes. We are most encouraged by the response.

Manufacturing Output

22. Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the latest available statistics for United Kingdom manufacturing output; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The index of production for the three months to October 1984 is some 2·5 per cent. higher than it was a year ago, and 7·5 per cent. higher than at its last trough in the first quarter of 1981. These figures indicate that manufacturing industry's output is continuing its encouraging recovery.

66. Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the most recent figure for output in manufacturing industry; and how this compares with the figure for the same month in 1979.

Mr. Norman Lamont: For the three months to October 1984 the index of production for manufacturing industry is 99, based on 1980 equal to 100. This is 7 per cent. lower than the index of production for manufacturing industry in the three months to October 1979.

Manned Space Station Programme

25. Mr. Batiste asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will make a statement concerning British participation in the manned space station programme planned by the United States Government.

62. Mr. Michael Marshall asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to make a response to the invitation from the United States Government for British and European Space Agency involvement in the development of manned space stations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: The Government are giving full consdideration to President Reagan's invitation to participate in an international space station. This proposal is being examined in the context of the long-term plan of the European Space Agency, which is to be discussed at a ministerial council of the agency in January.

Electronics Industry (Labour)

26. Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to stimulate the supply of skilled labour in the electronics industry.

Mr. Fletcher: I refer my hon. Friend to the report of the information technology skills shortages committee, chaired by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, a copy of which is in the Library. In this report the committee proposed a new "partnership for change" between industry and the academic world to tackle the problem of IT skill shortages at the graduate level. Action is in hand to put the committee's proposals into effect. The committee is currently considering the question of IT skill shortages at other levels in the work force.

Better Business Service

27. Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to introduce in England and Wales a service akin to the Scottish Better Business Service.

Mr. Trippier: I and my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales announced on 26 November and 7 December, respectively comparable packages of schemes for England and Wales called "Business Improvement Services".

New Technology (Applications)

28. Mr. Bright asked the Secretary of Trade and Industry what measures his Department has introduced to assist small and medium-sized firms in the application of new technologies.

Mr. Trippier: Small and medium sized firms have been eligible to apply for the assistance towards innovative projects that has been available under the Department's support for innovation programme, and many have been helped.

In addition, advisory services and consultancy arrangements set up by the Department have helped small and medium sized firms get access to expert advice about a range of problems.

Invisible Exports

29. Mr. Franks asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to encourage trade in invisible exports.

Mr. Fletcher: The invisibles sectors make an indispensable contribution to the balance of payments and to employment. To help their development, we shall continue to press internationally, and in particular in the European Community and the GATT, for the removal of restrictions which affect British invisible trade in foreign markets.

I strongly support the promotional work of the British Invisible Exports Council and the British Tourist Authority at home and abroad. The British Overseas Trade Board has recently reviewed its assistance to service sector exporters, and will seek to improve it.

Travel Agents (Failure)

30 Mr. Nicholls asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he is satisfied with the arrangements currently in existence to compensate holidaymakers when travel agents collapse.

Mr. Fletcher: Yes. There are few service industries in this country where the customer's money is as well protected as in the travel industry. Well over 90 per cent. of retail trade outlets are members of the Association of British Travel Agents which, through its code of practice, provides reimbursement of customers' money in the event of a member's failure.

Shipping Orders

31 Mr. Hill asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, in the third quarter of 1984, how many vessels over 500 deadweight tonnage were ordered for building in the United Kingdom or abroad by United Kingdom shipowners for registration in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In the third quarter of 1984 there were six vessels of over 500 DWT ordered under the United Kingdom flag, four of which orders were placed in United Kingdom yards.

Companies Registration Office, Cardiff

32 Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he is satisfied with the efficiency of the Companies Registration Office in Cardiff; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: As announced to the House on 6 April 1984, additional resources have been provided to ensure that the Companies Registration Office can perform its duties more effectively, whilst consideration is given to the future functions, organisation and operations of the office in order to improve further its efficiency.

Steel Pipes (United States Government Talks)

33 Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on his talks with the United States Government on steel pipes.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The European Commission, which has been conducting discussions on this issue on behalf of the EC, reported to the Industry/Steel Council on 17 December that no basis had yet been identified for a negotiated settlement with the United States Administration. Discussions are continuing both bilaterally and in the framework of GATT.

Small Firms Service

34. Mr. John Browne asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he is satisfied with the current level of publicity for the small firms service.

Mr. Trippier: I recently reviewed the level of take-up of the small firms inquiry service and concluded that further publicity is required. The first phase of a new round of national advertising to promote this service was completed in November and further advertisements will appear in 1985. I shall be monitoring the response to this campaign and will take the results into account in planning future publicity.

46. Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many inquiries the small firms service has answered in the last three months.

Mr. Trippier: During the period August to October 1984 the small firms service answered 64,610 inquiries.

53. Mr. Cartiss asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many business counsellors are under contract to the small firms service.

Mr. Trippier: At 30 November there were 261 business counsellors under contract to the Department of Trade and Industry providing advice to small firms in England. In Scotland and Wales, business counselling is provided by the Scottish and Welsh Development Agencies.

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he has any plans to extend the small firms service.

Mr. Trippier: No. The small firms service was strengthened in 1983. In that year a new small firms centre was opened in Reading and the counselling resources were expanded in order to assist more small businesses, in particular those arising through the expanded enterprise allowance scheme.

Mr. Couchman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures he has taken to improve the speed of response of the small firms service.

Mr. Trippier: The small firms service is regularly reviewed with a view to improving the speed and quality of response. During 1984, a microcomputer system, a major objective of which is to provide a faster and more comprehensive service to inquirers, has been installed in all small firms centres in England, except the Cambridge centre, which will receive its system early next year.

Northern Region

35. Mr. Dixon asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate his Department has made of the annual reduction in regional development grants to the northern region, as a result of the measures announced on 28 November.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Estimates of the reduction in annual expenditure on regional development grants have not been made in respect of individual planning regions in England.

Small Firms

36. Mr. Gerald Bowden asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to increase the level of advice on marketing available to small firms from his Department.

Mr. Trippier: On 26 November I launched a new package of assistance for small firms in English areas affected by job losses in the steel, shipbuilding and textile industries. The package—known as business improvement services (BIS)—includes grants towards the cost of consultancy advice on developing a marketing strategy. There are also grants for specific market research and for translations of market information and sales literature. Copies of the publicity leaflets for BIS have been placed in the Library.

The British Overseas Trade Board provides a range of assistance which can help the smaller exporter with marketing overseas.

56. Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures he is taking to reduce the level of Government-imposed burdens on small firms.

Mr. Trippier: Progress has already been made in reducing the level of Government-imposed burdens on small firms. An inter-departmental scrutiny is now being carried out on administrative and legislative burdens and will report in January 1985. I hope this will result in recommendations for further reductions in burdens, to which this Government attach great importance.

61. Mr. Michael Brown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to inform professional advisers about the help available to small firms through Government schemes.

Mr. Trippier: My Department is sponsoring further seminars in the "Help for Growing Businesses" series early in 1985. These will be held at 50 venues throughout England and Wales to stress the importance of business planning and financial control in small firms and will also provide an opportunity to inform professional advisers about relevent changes to Government schemes and new initiatives.

63. Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what his Department is doing to improve management education and training in small firms.

Mr. Trippier: My Department seeks to stimulate the provision of management education and training for small firms which is both accessible and appropriate to their particular needs. Those running small firms can take advantage of the many courses offered by educational establishments, including the enterprise training funded by the Manpower Services Commission which is being increased. I am encouraging awareness of the value of training and my Department will be running a Local Enterprise Week in May 1985 which will give it prominence. Linked to the May event will be the launch of a video sponsored by my Department and the MSC to stimulate small firms to undertake training.

Copyright

37. Mr. Greg Knight asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has received any representations on reform of the existing legislation on copyright.

Mr. Fletcher: Following publication in 1981 of the Government's Green Paper "Reform of the Law relating to Copyright, Designs and Performers' Protection" (Cmnd. 8302), my Department has received several hundred comments on all aspects of copyright. In recent weeks Ministers have received representations on home taping, record rental and software piracy.

45. Mr. Hanley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to reform the Copyright Act 1956.

Mr. Channon: Work is continuing in my Department on a comprehensive reform of the Copyright Act 1956, but it is not possible at this stage to say when a Bill will be introduced. However significant amendments to the Act in respect of video and record piracy and cable and satellite television have already been brought into effect.

Research and Development Assistance

38. Mr. Geoffrey Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations from industry his Department has received concerning his statement on 12 November regarding the moratarium on research and development assistance.

Mr. Fletcher: As at 13 December, written representations had been received from 20 individuals, firms or organisations.

44. Mr. Park asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received from the General Electric Company concerning his statement on 12 November on the moratorium on research and development assistance.

Mr. Fletcher: Dealings between the Department and individual companies take place in confidence.

Industrial Building Allowance

39. Mr. Waller asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assessment he has made of the effectiveness of industrial building allowances in encouraging the provision of new and refurbished small unit accommodation by the private sector.

Mr. Trippier: The Department of Trade and Industry's preliminary study on the effect of the 100 per cent. industrial building allowance for small industrial premises published in 1982 found that the number of small workshops provided each year had probably tripled since the allowance was introduced and that, in the areas surveyed, the private sector share of the market rose from 39 per cent. to 79 per cent. of the units built. I am currently carrying out a more detailed review of the effect of the allowance and will publish the results on its completion.

British Telecom (Tenders)

40. Mr. Golding asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will take steps to seek to prevent British Telecommunications plc from asking only foreign-owned companies to tender for alternative switching equipment to system X.

Mr. Fletcher: British Telecom is now a private company and its final choice of second source supplier of switching equipment must be its own commercial decision.

Local Authorities (Trading Standards)

41. Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how it is intended to staff the joint committees charged under schedule 8 to the Local Government Bill with the co-ordination of the implementation by metropolitan district councils of their responsibilities for trading standards under the Weights and Measures Act 1963.

Mr. Fletcher: The Local Government Bill provides for the joint committees to comprise members nominated by the district councils in each metropolitan county. The committees will not employ staff, but will draw their support from the districts which will share the costs equitably.

Brazil

42. Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to encourage the development of trade with Brazil; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Channon: Through the British Overseas Trade Board, my Department provides United Kingdom industry with advice and a wide range of services in support of its efforts in the market.

Small Firms (Purchasing Contracts)

43. Mr. John Townend asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has as to the proportion of purchasing contracts from central and local government received by small firms.

Mr. Trippier: Records are not kept on the proportion of Government procurement contracts that go to small firms. However, the Ministry of Defence is currently collecting information on the value of its direct contracts placed with small and medium-sized firms in the present financial year. Local authorities are responsible for their own purchasing. I am not aware of any systematic information available on the proportion of their purchasing contracts received by small firms.

Amble

47. Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry why he has excluded Amble from regional development status under his recently announced proposals.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Amble is part of the Alnwick and Amble travel-to-work area. That area certainly has an unemployment rate which is above the national average, but this is true of many areas which are not included in the new assisted areas map. Furthermore, in reaching decisions on the new map, we took account not just of employment but of a number of other factors, too. On the overall criteria used for making comparisons with the country generally, the Alnwick and Amble travel-to-work area did not justify assisted area status.

Regional Development Grant

48. Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what estimate his Department made of the expected annual reduction in regional development grants to Wales prior to the announcement of 28 November.

Mr. Norman Lamont: Payments under the old RDG scheme will continue for some time under the transitional arrangements. However, by 1987-88 expenditure on regional development grants in respect of Wales was estimated to be about £75 million less as a result of the new policy.

Mr. William Powell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the total of regional development grant paid in the Corby development area in (a) 1983-84 and (b) 1984-85 to date.

Mr. Trippier: The information available in respect of regional development grant paid in the Corby development area in the periods specified is given in the following table:

Corby Development Area £'000

Grant paid	6,505	1,031

* Total of payments over £25,000 only. Grant payments of £25,000 or less cannot be attributed to any unit smaller than a planning region.

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will list the amount paid out in regional development grants for the last financial year for (a) England, (b) Merseyside and (c) Wirral.

Mr. Trippier: The information available in respect of regional development grant paid in 1983-84 in respect of the areas specified is given in the following table:

Regional development grant paid under part II of the Industrial Development Act 1982

	1983-84 £'000
England	223,832
Merseyside (a)	(c) 61,391
Wirral (b)	(c) 35,804

(a) Merseyside comprises the Merseyside metropolitan county and those parts of the former Merseyside special development area outside Merseyside metropolitan county.

(b) Wirral is conterminous with what was the Birkenhead travel-to-work area (TTWA).

(c) Total of payments of £25,000 only. Grant payments of £25,000 or less cannot be attributed to any unit smaller than a planning region.

Local Enterprise Agencies

49. Mr. Robert B. Jones asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many local enterprise agencies are in existence; and how many are in the process of being set up.

Mr. Trippier: There are 233 local enterprise agencies in existence, including all those organisations which, under section 48 of the Finance Act 1982, have been approved as local enterprise agencies. Some 35 more are in varying stages of formation.

Mr. Gregory asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many local enterprise agencies have been approved for tax relief.

Mr. Trippier: I am pleased to say that to date 185 local enterprise agencies have been approved for tax relief purposes.

Leicester

50. Mr. Janner asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will take steps to stimulate the traditional industries of the city of Leicester.

Mr. Trippier: The Government's overall economic policies are designed to create a favourable environment for business in which all firms, including those engaged in traditional activities, can become more competitive.

Knitted Goods (Imports)

51. Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry to what extent imports of knitted goods from Portugal and Turkey, in the last available 12 month period, are in excess of that permitted in the voluntary restraint agreements.

Mr. Channon: The Portuguese authorities have firmly assured the Commission that their newly introduced export management system will enable them fully to respect the levels agreed between them and the Community in respect of their exports of knitted goods for 1984. It does not appear that Portuguese export authorisations for these goods have so far exceeded those levels, but officials are keeping a close watch on these statistics together with those for actual imports into the United Kingdom this year.

There is no voluntary restraint arrangement between the Community and Turkey covering knitted goods. Quotas have been established under the safeguard provisions of the EC-Turkey association agreement on a number of knitted products and these are being fully enforced.

Small Businesses

54. Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will take further steps to encourage small businesses.

Mr. Trippier: We are committed to building on the progress already made, in particular by reducing burdens and promoting awareness of the help available to small firms. Small Firms Local Enterprise Week, to be held from 15 to 24 May 1985, will provide a good opportunity to publicise the wide range of local initiatives to encourage small firms.

Manufacturers' Products (Register)

55. Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will establish a central register of British manufacturers' products.

Mr. Trippier: I have at present no plans to do so. In general, information services of this kind are best provided by the private sector.

Fraud

57. Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he is satisfied with current measures taken to deal with City fraud.

Mr. Fletcher: I believe that the measures the Government have already announced and others which will be announced shortly will provide stronger weapons for dealing with financial fraud.

Information Technology (R and D)

58. Mr. Penhaligon asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will outline what the Government's policy is on providing support for research and development for information technology; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: Information technology is one of the few high growth sectors of economies throughout the world. In recognition of its unique significance, this Government have, since 1979, devoted increasing funds to support the development of information technology in the United Kingdom and have engaged in or encouraged a range of programmes aimed at stimulating the use of IT and awareness of its potential benefits.

The Government's commitment to ensuring a healthy United Kingdom IT industry in the longer term has been demonstrated by their support for the five-year pre-competitive Alvey research programme; and for the ESPRIT programme, which is also strengthening industry and Government collaboration at European level.

The Government remain committed to supporting innovative developments likely to lead to internationally competitive products and to promoting their successful use in the United Kingdom environment. The success of the DTI's support schemes has led to the recently announced moratorium on further applications. I shall be in a position to make a statement on the future orientation of R and D support on completion of the current review.

Hire Purchase Act 1964

59 Mr. Heddle asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to conduct a review of the Hire Purchase Act 1964.

Mr. Fletcher: I have no plans to do so.

Loan Guarantee Scheme

60 Mr. Bellingham asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he expects to make an announcement about the future of the loan guarantee scheme beyond the end of 1984.

Mr. Trippier: An announcement on the extension of the loan guarantee scheme until the end of 1985 was made on 17 December 1984.

Patents Office (Green Paper)

64 Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry, of the representations he has received in respect of the Patents Office, arising from the Green Paper on intellectual property, how many have expressed unconditional support for recommendation No.1.

Mr. Channon: Six of the 50 representations we have received on recommendation No.1. of the Green Paper "Intellectual Property Rights and Innovation" (Cmnd.9117), that is, that the Patent Office should become a separate statutory body, have expressed unconditional support. Ten of the remaining representations on this recommendation have expressed support, subject only to provisos on implementation.

Multi-Fibre Arrangement

65 Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he now expects the publication of the Silberston Report on the multi-fibre arrangement.

Mr. Trippier: Professor Silberston's report on the multi-fibre arrangement and the United Kingdom economy was published on 13 December. Its findings are summarised in an answer given to a written question by my hon. Friend the Member for Staffordshire, South East (Mr Lightbown) on that day.

Manufactured Exports

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will give the figures for total manufactured exports to the United States of America for 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982 and 1983 and the first, second and third quarters of 1984, together with the rate of increase or decrease, for the United Kingdom, West Germany, Japan, Sweden and France.

Mr. Channon: The figures, in both national currencies and United States dollars for the years 1979 to 1983 and the available information for 1984 are in the table.

Tourism (Merseyside)

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he has any plans to seek to establish a tourist authority for Merseyside; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: Merseyside is already covered by the North-West Tourist Board which is one of the 12 regional tourist boards fostered and partially financed by the English Tourist Board. The establishment of local tourist groups is a matter for local interests.

Net Book Agreement

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recent representations he or the Director General of Fair Trading have received concerning the operation of the net book agreement; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: My right hon. Friend has received no recent representations on this subject and nor, I understand, has the Director General of Fair Trading.

The net book agreement was considered by the Restrictive Practices Court in 1962 and judged not to be contrary to the public interest. The Director General of Fair Trading keeps the operation of the agreement under review.

Imported Electrical Goods

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has as to the methods used by the United States Government for ensuring that imported electrical goods comply with domestic electrical safety legislation.

Mr. Channon: Electrical goods in the United States must comply with basic regulations set out in the United States code of federal regulations. In addition, although not mandatory in any state, electrical goods marketed in the United States generally bear the seal of approval of the Underwriters Laboratories (UL). The seal of approval is widely regarded as a guarantee of quality and safety and is effectively a commercial necessity for both domestic and foreign manufacturers. Testing for purposes of the UL seal of approval can be carried out only in the United States.

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what recommendations his Department makes to trading standards authorities regarding the provision of facilities to test imported electrical goods whose safety is suspect.

Mr. Fletcher: My Department does not formally make recommendations on the facilities required by local authorities to carry out tests on imported electrical goods, although a wide range of topics concerning product safety are discussed from time to time. However, in the majority of cases where a trading standards authority decides to prosecute a supplier of dangerous electrical goods, the authority is required to use one of three test houses approved for the purpose by the Secretary of State. These test houses have been approved for their expertise in interpreting the requirements and the tests that are needed under the provisions of the Electrical Equipment (Safety) Regulations.

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what assurances he has sought from the Yugoslavian authorities that electric lamps being supplied by that country to the United Kingdom are manufactured in compliance with the electrical equipment safety regulations.

Mr. Fletcher: None. It is the responsibility of the importer of electric lamps manufactured in Yugoslavia to ensure that they comply with the Electrical Equipment (Safety) Regulations.

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is his Department's practice in seeking to ensure that imported electrical consumer goods from outside the European Economic Community comply with the low voltage directive; and what information he has as to the comparable measures taken in France.

Mr. Fletcher: Electrical products which operate within a specified voltage range are required to comply with the Electrical Equipment (Safety) Regulations and thereby achieve the level of safety required by the low voltage directive. The regulations apply to electrical goods offered for supply in the United Kingdom, wherever manufactured.

My officials have recently discussed the laws applicable to the safety of goods with their French counterparts and concluded that the measures adopted in that country are not significantly different from those in the United Kingdom.

Ferrous Scrap

Mr. Coleman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has on the amount by which the prices of ferrous scrap have risen since May 1979; and whether the Government have any plans for controlling the price of such scrap.

Mr. Trippier: The average price of the main grades of ferrous steel scrap has risen by 20 per cent. since May 1979.

The Government have no plans to control the price of such scrap.

Steel Industry (Joint Ventures)

Mr. Coleman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report a list of all the joint companies that have been established between private firms and the British Steel Corporation since May 1979 to the present date; if he will also give the total value of the British Steel Corporation assets concerned; and what amount the private sector paid for them.

Mr. Norman Lamont: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

EC (Trade Statistics)

Mr. George Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what proportion of consumer goods imported into the European Community from the near east and far east come into the United Kingdom.

Mr. Channon: In 1982 direct imports into the United Kingdom from the near east and the far east accounted for 45 per cent. and 28 per cent. respectively, of direct imports into the European Community as a whole. Information for any later period could be produced only at disproportionate cost.

Technical Ceramics

Mr. Bulmer asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what resources are being devoted by his Department to the research and development of technical ceramics.

Mr. Trippier: The Department expects to spend about £1·5 million in the current financial year in support of research and development on technical ceramics. Of this sum, approximately £500,000 will be in industrial companies, £450,000 in the Department's own laboratories and £550,000 at other research establishments. Expenditure next year is expected to exceed £2 million, of which more than £900,000 will be in industry.

Manufactured Goods

Mr. Fisher asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he is satisfied with the current trend of trade in manufactured goods.

Mr. Norman Lamont: In the first 10 months of this year exports of manufactures were 8·5 per cent. higher than last year in volume terms. That was an encouraging increase.

Israel (Common External Tariff)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what information he has as to the incidence of third countries using the free trade agreement between the European Economic Community and Israel in order to circumvent the common external tariff for certain industrial goods.

Mr. Channon: I have no information that there are any goods being imported into the Community duty-free from Israel which are not of Israeli origin for the purposes of the Community's agreement with Israel.

Export Credits Guarantee Department

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures he will take to maintain Export Credits Guarantee Department support for United Kingdom trade with countries which have rescheduled some of their officially guaranteed debt but which, nevertheless, are taking vigorous and effective action to deal with their economic problems.

Mr. Channon: I recognise the value of maintaining trading links wherever possible with such countries. Consequently I now intend to allow ECGD greater flexibility so that, in appropriate cases, cover may be restored at an earlier stage after the rescheduling of officially guaranteed debts. This cover will be given for exports of United Kingdom goods and services contributing to the economic recovery of the debtor country and will be provided under ECGD's section 2 (national interest) powers. However, in the light of previous assurances that have been given to Parliament about the use of these powers, I would make it clear that use of this discretion will be selective and only authorised where we are satisfied that the debtor country is taking appropriate action in dealing with its problems. I would stress that this does not represent any relaxation of ECGD's general standards of assessing country risks on overseas markets.

Whilst I would expect that ECGD cover in these circumstances could be provided on a break-even basis over the longer term, I recognise that the provision of new cover to countries carrying a heavy debt burden does involve a high degree of risk. For this reason, it is intended to control its use especially carefully. However, it has been agreed that the financial outturn of this business will not affect the level of ECGD's premium charges for other categories of business.

This modest improvement in ECGD's arrangements should not only assist United Kingdom exporters to maintain a stake in overseas markets which are in the process of recovering from debt service difficulties; it should also help in the present international debt situation by providing an incentive to the debtor countries to adopt vigorous adjustment policies, usually in conjunction with an IMF programme. Decisions on the resumption of cover for particular debtor countries will be announced by ECGD from time to time.

Commercial Bills

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will take steps to reduce the delays in payment of commercial bills by Her Majesty's Government to smaller firms.

Mr. Trippier: I am not aware how far this is a significant problem, but if my hon. Friend has some specific evidence I would certainly like to examine it with the Department concerned.

Spain (Motor Vehicles)

Mr. Speed asked the Secretary of Trade and Industry if he will make a statement about new Government initiatives to introduce fair competition and an equalisation of tariffs in the motor vehicle exports to, and imports from, Spain.

Mr. Channon [pursuant to his reply, 12 November 1984, c. 86]: I can inform my hon. Friend that an agreement was reached between the Community and Spain on industrial tariffs at the ministerial meeting on 18 December. Duties in trade between the United Kingdom and Spain will be eliminated seven years after accession. Tariffs will be dismantled in both directions (on the assumption that accession takes place on 1 January 1986 as planned) as follows:

	Percentage
1 March 1986	10
1 January 1987	12·5
1 January 1988	15
1 January 1989	15
1 January 1990	12·5
1 January 1991	12·5
1 January 1992	12·5
1 January 1993	10

This means that three years after accession, Spain's highly protective duties on industrial products will have been more than halved.

This system will apply to all duties, including that on cars. There will, however, be in addition a reduced duty quota for cars from the EC of 32,000 in 1986, 36,000 in 1987 and 40,000 in 1988. These figures include a reserve of 4,000 cars, 2,000 of which will be specifically allocated to the United Kingdom for use in respect of cars of any capacity. The remainder of the quota will be available for all. Given that the United Kingdom has 15 per cent. of the existing car quotas, the Government are confident that, taking the two elements together, the total United Kingdom share of the quota will be around 5,000 in year one, rising appreciably thereafter. The duty rate for the quota will be 17·4 per cent. compared with a weighed average of 23 per cent. under the existing quota.

The Government believe that this settlement offers United Kingdom manufacturers, both of cars and of other products, major new opportunities in the Spanish market.

Quite separately, I am hopeful that the Spanish Government will make interim improvements to existing quotas for the period 1 July to 31 December 1985. These should yield an increase of about 50 per cent. (on an annualised basis) on existing United Kingdom quota allocation.

Loan Guarantee Scheme

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what percentage of loans from the loan guarantee scheme has gone to start-up firms.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to the reply, 18 December 1984, c. 127]: At 30 November 1984, 52 per cent. of loans had gone to start-up firms.

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much money the Government have received to date in premiums.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to the reply, 18 December 1984, c. 127]: At 30 November 1984, £16·2 million had been received in premiums.

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many firms to date have benefited from the loan guarantee scheme.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to the reply, 18 December 1984, c. 127]: At 30 November 1984, 15,717 guarantees had been issued although approximately 700 firms have had two guarantees.

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what is the total money guaranteed so far under the loan guarantee scheme.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to the reply, 18 December 1984, c. 127]: At 30 November 1984, loans totalling £513 million had been guaranteed.

Trafalgar House

Mr. Millan asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether there have been any cash payments to Trafalgar House, directly or indirectly, in respect of its purchase of Scott Lithgow, since the answer of 9 April, Official Report, column 19; and whether any additional payments are now anticipated.

Mr. Butcher [pursuant to the reply, 18 December 1984, c. 127]: Under the terms of sale of Scott Lithgow, British Shipbuilders (BS) has contingent liabilities in respect of:

(i) certain sub-contracted steelwork for the Britoil rig, whose quality was in doubt. Payments totalling £1 million have been made and a further cost of £1 million is expected to arise;

(ii) benefits, equivalent to the shipbuilding redundancy payments scheme, to a maximum of 1,600 workers who might be made redundant within a year of the sale.

Payments totalling £400,000 have been made so far. Further costs will depend on the extent of further redundancies;

(iii) any additional costs arising from the settlement of the completion accounts relating to the sale.

Agreement has yet to be reached and it is not possible at this stage to forecast what, if any, payments will be necessary. In addition, and also under the terms of the sale, BS had paid £16 million in liquidated damages to BP in respect of the late delivery of the oil rig almost completed by Scott Lithgow and currently undergoing sea trials.

BS will also receive this year £3 million from Trafalgar House as part of the £12 million consideration to be paid over four years.

SCOTLAND

Tourism

Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will collect and publish accurate statistics on an annual basis, showing the number of people employed in the tourism industry in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Separate figures for Scotland for the industries most clearly related to tourism are available from the detailed census of employment. Figures for September 1981 were published in the supplement to the December 1983 issue of the Employment Gazette. Figures for September 1984 will be published in due course. As regards estimates of GB employment and the definitional difficulties in this field, I would refer my hon. Friend to the answer given on 14 December, at column 630, by my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State for Employment.

Police (Pay)

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the current rates of basic pay for each rank in the police force; what additional emoluments are payable; and what were the comparable figures in each of the last five years expressed in cash terms and in annual percentage increases.

Mr. Ancram: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Dental Services

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) what share of the costs of general dental services in Scotland was borne by the Exchequer in 1983-84;

(2) by what percentage the maximum charge to the patient for routine dental treatment has increased between April 1979 and April 1984.

Mr. John MacKay: 75·4 per cent. and 190 per cent. respectively.

Public Sector Industies (Capital Assets)

Mr. Merchant asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the value of the capital assets, including land, of (a) the South of Scotland Electricity Board, (b) Highlands and Islands Development Board, (c) the North of Scotland Hydroelectric Board and (d) public sector ports.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information for the South of Scotland Electricity Board, the North of Scotland Hydroelectric Board and the Highlands and Islands Development Board is contained in their annual reports and accounts, copies of which are held in the Library. For public sector ports the information is not available except at disproportionate cost.

Rent and Rebate Schemes

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on Scottish Development Department circular letter 72/1972 concerning the disregarding of war disablement and war pensions for the purposes of rent and rebate schemes.

Mr. Ancram: On 1 April 1983 the rent rebate scheme was replaced by housing benefit, which is the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Social Services. As a consequence, SDD circular letter 72/1972 has been cancelled.

School Books and Equipment

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what has been the expenditure on (a) books and (b) equipment per pupil in each education authority in each year since 1980; and what is the corresponding figure for Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The available information, complied from local authority expenditure returns, is shown in the following table. Expenditure on educational equipment and materials was not separately identified in these returns before 1982-83. Figures for individual authorities are not directly comparable because of variation in items included in the returns under the two categories in question.

Forestry

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) on how many occasions in 1982-83 and 1983-84 the Forestry Commission issued felling licences, which permitted felling of broadleaved woods, without there being conditions attached for the replanting solely of braodleaved trees; and how many hectares of woodland this totalled in each year;

(2) on how many occasions in 1982-83 and 1983-84 the Forestry Commission issued felling licences which permitted the clear-felling of broadleaved woodlands for conversion to agricultural land; and how many hectares of woodland this totalled in each case.

Mr. John MacKay: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland why, when a local authority objects or recommends amendments to a felling licence application, the Forestry Commission does not always inform the local authority of its decision relating to that application.

Mr. John MacKay: It is the practice of the Forestry Commission in these circumstances to discuss the application with the local authority and the applicant, as appropriate, and to inform the local authority of the decision eventually reached.

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to ensure that no further ancient semi-natural woodlands on the Forestry Commission's estate are clear-felled until such time as the Forestry Commission produces its policy statement on broadleaved woodland in Britain.

Mr. John MacKay: It is the Forestry Commission's intention that ancient semi-natural woods identified on its land will be managed in accordance with guidelines to be agreed with the Nature Conservancy Council.

In the meantime, however, the commission will follow the spirit of these proposed arrangements.

Housing Revenue (Dundee)

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will express the total of Dundee district council's housing revenue for each year since 1980-81 in percentage terms of rents, housing support grant and rate fund contribution.

Mr. Ancram: The information is as follows:

Housing Revenue Account

	Housing Support Grant percentage	Rate Fund contribution percentage	Rents percentage	Other income percentage
1980-81	31	*−1	55	15
1981-82	22	23	52	3

Fines (Enforcement)

Mr. Malone asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects the report of the fines enforcement officer experiments in Airdrie and Edinburgh to be published.

Mr. Younger: The report of the experiments has now been evaluated and is being published today. Copies have been placed in the Libraries of both Houses. The results of the experiments in Edinburgh and Airdrie are encouraging and I have already announced our intention to extend the scheme to other sheriff courts in Scotland as resources permit. We have for some time been concerned at the number of prison sentences served for non-payment of fines. We expect the introduction of a fines officer scheme to help to reduce these numbers and at the same time increase revenue from fines.

Shipping Services

Mr. Malone asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial assistance he proposes for shipping services to the Scottish islands in 1985-86.

Mr. Younger: I propose to give deficit grants of £7·5 million to Caledonian MacBrayne and £0·95 million to the Orkney Islands Shipping Company. I propose also to provide support for P and O and bulk shipping operators to allow them to continue to rebate the fares and charges on their services on the present basis of discounts. I have therefore made provision of £3·4 million for P and O and £1·5 million for the bulk shippers.

In total, Government revenue support 1985-86 will amount to some £13·35 million, an increase of 8·6 per cent. over the sum which I estimate will be required in the current financial year.

Septic Tanks

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what information he has as to which local authorities in Scotland have opted to undertake the emptying of all septic tanks within (a) their entire area or (b) any part of their area, in terms of section 10(1) of the Sewerage (Scotland) Act 1968.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is not held centrally. It is for local sewerage authorities to decide their policies on this from time to time.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Fisheries Council

Mr. Wallace asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will report on the outcome of the European Economic Community Council of Fisheries Ministers held on 19 December.

Mr. Jopling: Together with my right hon. and noble Friend the Minister of State, Scottish Office, and my hon. Friend the Minister of State in my Department, I represented the United Kingdom at the meeting of the Council of Fisheries Ministers on 19 December.

The Commission completed its proposals for the total allowable catches (TACs) and quotas for 1985, following the agreement which it had reached with Norway on 13 December on arrangements for 1985 for the full range of stocks subject to the EC-Norway fisheries agreement, with the exception of North sea herring. On this stock the Commission proposed a provisional TAC and quotas for the member states in the Community sector pending the completion of negotiations with Norway in the course of 1985. The Commission also submitted for approval the outcome of its negotiations with the Faroe Islands and Spain on the arrangements for 1985 under the fisheries agreements with these countries. In addition, the Commission put forward a proposal for a Council regulation providing interim arrangements for fishing by member states in Greenland waters pending ratification of the treaty on Greenland's withdrawal and the associated agreement on fisheries.

Negotiations proceeded on the basis of these proposals into the early hours of the morning, when the Presidency and the Commission were able to put forward a compromise package to which all other member states were able to give their agreement. I considered that this package was a very satisfactory one for the United Kingdom too, but in view of the recommendation of the Select Committee on European Legislation I entered a formal reservation on the adoption of the regulations for 1985 pending a debate in the House, which I hope it will be possible to hold shortly after the Christmas recess. In order that fishing should not be interrupted I agreed that the regulations in question should be adopted on an interim basis to 20 January only, pending clarification of the United Kingdom position following completion of parliamentary scrutiny procedures.

The House will be given a full account of the compromise package in the forthcoming debate. It contains significant improvements in the availabilities for our fishermen for all the important North sea white fish stocks and for a number of the flatfish stocks in the south-west and western waters. In no case are any of these quotas lower than for 1984. There is also a significant increase in the availability, and improvement in the distribution, of North Sea herring and, pending agreement on a definitive allocation of the stock for 1985, there will be no Norwegian fishing for herring in the Community sector of the North Sea. The quotas allocated to Norway and the Faroes for 1985 for certain pelagic stocks of particular interest to United Kingdom fishermen have been reduced.

The quotas allocated to Spain for hake, monk, megrim, and other by-catch species are the same as those for 1984 but there is a downward adjustment of the number of licences for Spanish vessels in those fisheries.

Finally, under other business I raised the question of Community logbooks. I received a firm assurance that the logbooks, which had now been distributed, would be in force from 1 April 1985.

This was an important Council meeting which led to a very satisfactory settlement for the United Kingdom and I am glad to report that it was warmly welcomed by the representatives of the fishing industry.

Agricultural Land (Drainage)

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many hectares of agricultural land have been drained with grant-aid in each of the last 10 years.

Mrs. Fenner: I regret that this information is not available.

Milk (Outgoers Scheme)

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will modify the outgoers scheme to allow producers to surrender a proportion of their allocated quotas.

Mr. MacGregor: Council regulation 857/84 authorises member states to introduce outgoers schemes and pay compensation only to those who give up milk production definitively. It is not therefore possible to allow producers to surrender part of their quota.

Pesticides

Mr. Cartwright asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many insect pests of (a) cereals, (b) potatoes, (c) apples and (d) sugar beet are now wholly or partly resistant to insecticides or acaricides cleared under the pesticides safety precautions scheme.

Mrs. Fenner: Confirmed evidence of insecticide or acaricide resistance is as follows:

(a) standing cereal crops—none
(b) potatoes—one (peach potato aphid)
(c) apples one (fruit tree red spider mite)
(d) sugar beet—one (peach potato aphid)

Salmon

Dr. Cunningham asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what actions he proposes to take in the light of the recommendations of the report of the salmon sales group of the National Water Council on salmon conservation.

Mr. MacGregor: As I said in reply to the right hon. Member for Barnsley, Central (Mr. Mason) on 20 November, at column 100, we are examining the practical difficulties of establishing effective control on the lines recommended by the Salmon Sales Group of the former National Water Council and no decisions can be taken until we have the measure of the practical implications of such a scheme.

ENVIRONMENT

Empty Properties

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will place in the Library a copy of the circular to local authorities setting out ways in which better management practices can reduce the number of empty dwellings as soon as it is sent out.

Sir George Young: Yes.

Council House Sales

Mr. William Powell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list details of council housing to sitting tenants up to the latest convenient date by districts in the county of Northampton; and what is the percentage of relevant stock sold.

Sir George Young: I refer my hon. Friend to the answer given to the hon. Member for Norwood (Mr. Fraser) by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Construction on 14 December 1984, at column 644.

Pesticides

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what monitoring of pesticide pollution of the atmosphere is carried out in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waldegrave: Monitoring of pesticides in the atmosphere is carried out on a case-by-case basis for the purposes of specific research or where a specific problem requires investigation. Routine general monitoring of ambient levels of pesticides in the atmosphere is not thought to be necessary or justified.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if he will list those pesticides which have been detected in groundwater and in river waters in each of the water authority regions in England in each of the last five years;

(2) what monitoring of pesticide contamination of groundwater and of river water is carried out in each of the water authority regions in England;

(3) if he will list those pesticides known to occur or to have occurred in drinking water supplied to consumers in (a) Cardiff, (b) London, (c) Edinburgh and (d) Birmingham in each of the last five years.

Mr. Macfarlane: Data on pesticides detected in rivers and groundwater are not held centrally. However, all water authorities monitor their surface waters for the main organochlorine pesticide compounds. The general levels do not give cause for concern, either for human health or for aquatic life.

As there is less information on the newer pesticides which are replacing the organochlorines, the Department of the Environment is sponsoring exploratory surveys of these substances at some 250 sites in the United Kingdom.

Groundwaters are not generally monitored for pesticides except when they are used for water supplies.

Traces of atrazone, simazine, lindane and dieldrin have been detected in London water supplies in the last year at concentrations well below any known health risk.

No pesticides have been detected in Birmingham water supplies. My Department does not have information on pesticide concentrations in water supplies for earlier years, or for Cardiff or Edinburgh.

House Improvement Grants

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the amount paid out for the last financial year in house improvement grants for (a) England, (b) Merseyside and (c) Wirral.

Sir George Young: Latest estimates of local authorities' expenditure on renovation grants in 1983-84 are £911 million in England, £35 million in Merseyside metropolitan county and £12 million by Wirral metropolitan borough council.

Urban Aid Grants

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the sum paid out for the last financial year under sections 5 and 6 of urban aid grants for (a) England, (b) Merseyside and (c) Wirral metropolitan district.

Sir George Young: Local authorities for the districts designated under the Inner Urban Areas Act 1978 and the urban development corporations supply returns on a calendar year basis for the United Kingdom's annual report to the European Commission on the operation of that Act. These returns indicate that expenditure under sections 5 and 6 of the Act in England Merseyside and Wirral during 1983 was as follows:

		£ million
England*	Section 5	1·781	3·842
	Section 6	2·061
Merseyside	Section 5	0·412	1·028
	Section 6	0·616
Wirral	Section 5	0·088	0·128
	Section 6	0·040

* One authority (not in Merseyside) had not provided returns for 1983.

Derelict Land Grants

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list for the latest available date the amount paid in derelict land grants to (a) public bodies and (b) private owners for (i) England, (ii) Merseyside and (iii) Wirral.

Mr. Macfarlane: As at 18 December the amounts paid so far in derelict land grants for the current financial year are as follows:

	Grants to public bodies £	Grants to private persons or companies £
England	40,628,820	1,917,559
Merseyside*	1,758,911	218,506
Wirral	117,271	Nil

* Excluding Wirral Borough Council.

Merseyside Task Force

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish details on an annual basis of the budget of the Merseyside task force since its inception; and if he will break these sums down between Wirral and the rest of Merseyside.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: I have made funds available from my Department's programmes to support special initiatives on Merseyside. The money has been and is being spent on a wide variety of programmes and projects aimed at helping to tackle Merseyside's problems. Those funds have been substantially supported by Exchequer grant and have been administered by the Merseyside task force. They resulted in an outturn of £11·5 million in 1982-83 and £38·45 million in 1983-84; £35 million has been allocated in 1984-85. The figures for Wirral are £1·25 million in 1982-83; £4·29 million in 1983-84 and, to date, £4·5 million in 1984-85. The programmes concerned are: urban programme, derelict land, housing corporation and sport.

Housing Defects Act

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) what discussions he has had with building societies about the operation of the Housing Defects Act; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what undertakings he has received from building societies about the mortgageability of houses in categories named in the Housing Defects Act;

(3) what information he has as to those categories of housing which, prior to the passing of the Housing Defects Act, were difficult to mortgage on account of structural defects, real or potential, and which have become mortgageable since the passing of the Act.

Mr. Gow: Discussions with the National House Building Council and the Building Societies Association are continuing. I shall reply fully to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Local Government Capital Expenditure

Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what was the total of local authority capital expenditure, expressed in cost terms in each year since 1979, gross of sales of fixed assets.

Mr. Waldegrave: Total capital expenditure, gross of sales of fixed assets and including net lending (on a public expenditure survey basis) by English local authorities expressed in cost terms as an index (1978-79=100) (£3347 million) is as follows:

Year	Index
1978-79	100
1979-80	110
1980-81	96
1981-82	81
1982-83	90
*1983-84	91

* Provisional

For 1978-79 to 1982-83 the index is calculated from the figures published in table 2.18 of Cmnd. 9143-II with sales of fixed assets added back. For 1983-84 provisional estimates from local authorities are used. All figures are revalued using the GDP deflator.

Pumping Stations (Methane Gas)

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) how often regional water authorities conduct tests for methane gas leaks at pumping stations;

(2) how many tests for methane gas leaks have been carried out at pumping stations by regional water authorities in the last 12 months.

Mr. Gow: Detailed information on tests by water authorities for methane gas at water supply works is not available centrally. In accordance with advice given by the Health and Safety Executive, water supply undertakers are taking safety measures at their water works including appropriate tests for the presence of methane gas.

Asbestos

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is satisfied with the action taken by local authorities in South Yorkshire following the recent asbestos deposition.

Sir George Young: I am advised that the Sheffield city and Rotherham metropolitan borough councils have taken appropriate and effective action, and that the work of cleaning up is progressing smoothly.

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide financial support to the local authorities concerned with the recent asbestos fall-out in South Yorkshire.

Sir George Young: My hon. Friend will consider any representations that the authorities concerned may wish to make.

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he has taken in response to the recent fall-out of asbestos in parts of South Yorkshire; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: The primary responsibility for taking action in this matter lies with the local environmental health departments; my Department has kept in touch with the authorities concerned.

Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the volume of asbestos which fell upon areas of South Yorkshire between 14 and 16 December.

Sir George Young: It is not possible to make an accurate estimate of the volume of asbestos which fell on these areas.

Smokeless Zones

Sir. John Page asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will urgently complete his consultations about the possible lifting of smokeless zone requirements in certain areas so that he can announce his decision before Christmas.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend has aleady agreed to suspend smoke control orders temporarily in three areas where the local authorities concerned have formally requested it. The suspension orders will come into effect shortly. He is prepared to consider further requests in the light of evidence about the need for such action.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a breakdown of the estimated savings arising from the abolition of West Yorkshire metropolitan county council; and if he will make a statement.

Sir. George Young: I refer the hon. Member to the answer my right hon. Friend gave to the hon. Member for Surbiton (Mr. Tracey) on 30 November at column 611.

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to consult the Greater London council, the London boroughs or the local authority associations on his proposals to abolish the Greater London council's housing role, other than over the collective funding of voluntary bodies.

Sir George Young: Yes.

Housing Association Schemes (Finance)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if his announcements of the financing arrangements for housing association schemes will include proposals for the funding of housing associations whose operations cover more than one London borough.

Sir George Young: Yes. It is normal for such associations seeking local authority funding to do so from the borough in which the scheme lies.

GLC Expenditure Target

Mr. Stuart Holland asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what the increase in the Greater London council's expenditure target was between 1984-85 and the provisional estimate for 1985-86 before any adjustments were made for changes to transport support grant and the setting up of London Regional Transport.

Mr. Waldegrave: £354·089 million.

Rate Equalisation Scheme

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he intends to provide London ratepayers with information relating to an extended London rate equalisation scheme.

Mr. Waldegrave: It is for local authorities to inform ratepayers of the components of their rate demand.

Historic Buildings (Restoration)

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how much has been contributed by the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission for the restoration of historic buildings in London in each of the past five years.

Mr. Gow: In each of the last five years the total of grants offered for the repair of maintenance of buildings of outstanding historic or architectural interest in London is as follows. Only since 1 April 1984 has this been the responsibility of the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission.

1981-82	419,640
1982-83	442,457
1983-84	429,896
1984*	543,761

* To date.

Rented and Sheltered Accommodation

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those measures taken by the Government since 1979 to encourage a greater availability of general accommodation for rent and sheltered accommodation in the private sector; and if he will estimate the increase in both.

Sir George Young: The Housing Act 1980 contained several provisions designed to stimulate the provision of private rented accommodation, including the introduction of shorthold and assured tenancies; a reduction from two to three years in the periods between reviews of fair rents and over which increases in such rents are phased; and simpler and quicker repossession procedures for resident landlords and for absent owner-occupiers letting their homes. My right hon. Friend is at presentconsidering what further steps might be taken to build on these initiatives.

The Government are supporting a wide range of private sector initiatives to encourage greater provision of elderly persons' accommodation, and has launched a film on "Housing the Elderly" to highlight forward thinking in both the private and public sectors.

No comprehensive information is available on recent changes in the supply of private rented accommodation either for general needs or for the elderly.

Listed Building Consent

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when was the last occasion on which he decided to call in an application for listed building consent which had been received at the west midlands regional office of his Department.

Mr. Macfarlane: 29 November 1984.

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications for listed building consent were received at the west midlands regional office of his Department during October; how many of these applications were still outstanding on 31 October and 30 November; and how many are still outstanding.

Mr. Macfarlane: The number of applications received during October was 27; four of these were outstanding on 31 October and none on 30 November.

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many applications for listed building consent received at the west midlands regional office of his Department were outstanding on 31 July; how many of these applications were still outstanding on 31 August, 30 September, 31 October and 30 November; and how many are still outstanding.

Mr. Macfarlane: The number of applications outstanding on 31 July was 28. Of those six and two remained outstanding on 31 August and 30 September respectively. One of these was outstanding on 31 October.

Competitive Tendering

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is now able to announce the date on which the consultative document on competitive tendering by local authorities is to be published.

Mr. Waldegrave: I cannot yet announce a precise date for publication, but hope that it will be before the end of January.

Isle of Dogs Enterprise Zone

Mr. Mikardo asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the cost of the rates forgone, plus the cost of infrastructure works of creating each new job in the Isle of Dogs enterprise zone, excluding jobs in construction, jobs in the London Docklands Development Corporation's own offices, and jobs in Cannon Workshops.

Sir George Young: The London borough of Tower Hamlets and Newham have claimed the following amounts of rates forgone in the Isle of Dogs enterprise zone:

Newham	*208,738
Tower Hamlets	†4,556,053

*To 30 September 1983.
†To 30 September 1984.

By October of this year the corporation had carried out infrastructure and environmental works in the enterprise zone costing £21·543 million. Excluding jobs in construction, in LDDC's own offices, and in Cannon workshops, 732 jobs have been created. It is premature to make comparisons between the infrastructure works costs and the numbers of jobs created. The infrastructure works serve further sites now under development or in preparation.

The corporation estimate that by 1992 total expenditure in the enterprise zone will amount to £45 million. The resulting development capacity could produce 14,000 jobs at a cost per job of £3,215.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Mr. Ron Davies asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is considering legislation to grant national parks and local authorities the power immediately to stop development considered harmful to the environment in sites of special scientific interest.

Mr. Waldegrave: No. Adequate powers already exist for the control of potentially harmful development in SSSIs.

Housing Investment Programme Allocations

Mr. Gale asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide details of local authorities' housing investment programme allocations for 1985-86.

Mr. Gow: Gross provision for local authorities' housing investment in England in 1985-86 is £2,324 million. This sum includes £31 million for the homes insulation scheme, including administrative costs.

The total available for housing investment programme allocations is £1,600 million. The initial HIP allocation total is £1,593 million, a reserve of £7 million having been established from which further homes insulation scheme allocations may be made in accordance with demand. Each local authority is today being informed of its own allocation. Copies of the letter to authorities and of the schedule of initial allocations have been placed in the Library and the Vote office. A note on the method by which those allocations were determined has also been placed in the Library.

Osborne House Convalescent Home

Mr. Robert Atkins asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he will make a statement on the future management of the Osborne house convalescent home.

Mr. Macfarlane: I am glad to be able to announce that the Civil Service benevolent fund has agreed to enter into a contract to manage the home on my right hon. Friend's behalf, with effect from 1 July 1985. I am confident they will be able to maintain standards and to preserve the traditions of the home.

Grant Charges

Mr. Soames asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement about his proposals for safety-netting grant changes between 1984-85 and 1985-86.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The principles used in the construction of safety net multipliers were described in annex H to the Rate Support Grant Report (England) 1985-86, which was laid before the House on 11 December. Since then a technical error has been discovered in paragraph 6 of that annex. The error does not affect the statutory determinations of the multipliers or any of the calculations of grant or targets sent to local authorities. Nevertheless, for the removal of doubt, my right hon. Friend has today laid before the House the 1985-86 RSG report with a correction to the paragraph. The opportunity is also being taken to correct a printer's mistake. The text of the report is otherwise unchanged from the one published last week. A copy of the revised Report will be sent to all local authorities.

Ordnance Survey

Mr. Wolfson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when the report of the independent inquiry by Peat, Marwick and Mitchell into the competitive practices of the Ordnance Survey will be available to him; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 14 December 1984, c. 655]: Its report has recently been received and is now being considered both by the director general of the Ordnance Survey and by myself.

The report follows the announcement in January of this year by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment that the annual trading accounts for the Ordnance Survey, including statements on revenue and expenditure by main product groups, would be published, and that the basis of these accounts would be independently reviewed by commercial auditors. This will help to ensure that there is no cross subsidisation of Ordnance Survey's commercial activities from its Exchequer Vote.

It is intended that an executive summary of the report will be published.

Mr. Wolfson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what net profit has accrued to the Ordnance Survey from the sales of new atlases, town plans and guide books.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 14 December 1984, c. 655]: Whilst recognising the need for a reasonable balance between adequate disclosure and commercial discretion in relation to Ordnance Survey trading activities, I believe that it would not be proper to disclose this commercially sensitive information.

Mr. Wolfson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment why the independent report into the competitive position of the Ordnance Survey joint publishing activities has been submitted to the Ordnance Survey management rather than to him direct.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 14 December 1984, c. 656]: The report has been submitted to the director general, Ordnance Survey, and through him to me.

Pollution

Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many acres or hectares of trees are affected by the new form of damage reported in the Government reply to the "Report on Acid Rain" from the Environment Committee, Cmnd. 9397, to have recently been observed in north and west Britain; which species are affected, and in what proportions: and when this new form of damage was (a) first detected and by whom, (b) first publicly recorded and (c) first known to the Government.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 14 December 1984, c. 658]: It is difficult to assess accurately the area affected by the new form of damage to trees which is referred to in the Government reply to the Environment Committee report. Significant damage has been observed in a few older plantations at high elevations in forests along the western seaboard of Britain from Cumbria to Sutherland; it affects only a very small percentage of those forests. The species affectd are Scots pine, Lodgepole pine, Sitka spruce, Norway spruce, Douglas fir and Grand fir. The relative incidence appears to be similar for all species. Damage to Scots pine, Lodgepole pine, Douglas fir and Grand fir was first reported by Forestry Commission staff in Scotland and first known to the Forestry Commission in the period April-June 1984. Apparently similar damage to Sitka spruce was reported from Cumbria by the Friends of the Earth (Scotland) on 12 June 1984; this was the first public record of damage.

Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any evidence of tree damage associated with air pollution in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 14 December 1984, c. 658]: While there are clearly effects on trees adjacent to major sources of pollution, there is no present evidence of pervasive damage to trees in Britain in recent years that can be ascribed to air pollution; the Forestry Commission maintains a close watch on the situation.

Mr. Allan Roberts asked the Secretary of State for the Environment in what ways the new form of damage to trees reported in the reply to the Environment Committee "Report on Acid Rain" (Cmnd. 9397) as occurring in north and west Britain resembles that associated with air pollution in Germany; and whether the damage can be explained by the action of pathogenes, fungi, bacteria, stress, drought, climate or other causes not associated with (a) acid deposition and (b) other pollution.

Mr. Waldegrave [pursuant to his reply, 14 December 1984, c. 658]: The damage to spruce in Britain resembles that observed in Germany so far as the distribution of damaged shoots in the crowns of affected trees is concerned, but differs crucially in its occurrence at one time rather than over a number of years and in the absence of needle yellowing. The available evidence suggests that unusual climatic factors in the winter of 1983-84 were involved, but the Forestry Commission is still studying this phenomenon and it is too early to say whether the damage was caused by this or some other factor, or combination of factors.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Citizens Band Radio (Channel 9)

61. Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has to ensure that citizens band channel 9 is used solely as an emergency channel.

Mr. Butcher: Earlier this year the CB licence was amended to draw attention to the code of practice recommendation that channel 9 should be used for emergencies and assistance only. I am not convinced that any further measures at present are justified.

Civil Defence

62. Mr. Speller asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he hopes to have completed his studies into the role of industry in civil defence planning.

63. Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what measures he is taking to encourage industry to create an effective civil defence capability.

Mr. Trippier: I am hopeful that during the next year substantial progress will be made in assessing the essential requirements which industry could be called upon to supply for civil defence purposes, and industry's capability to meet them.

Industrial Assistance

Mr. Merchant asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much Government financial assistance has been given to the steel industry in the north-east of England in the last 10 years to offset working losses.

Mr. Norman Lamont: No financial assistance has been given to the private sector steel industry in the north-east of England for the purpose of offsetting working losses. The finance provided to BSC goes towards the general needs of the corporation and is not allocated to specific purposes and areas. I am asking BSC to supply information about trading losses in recent years in the north-east and I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Mr. Merchant asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much Government financial assistance has been given to the shipbuilding industry in the north-east of England in the last 10 years to offset working losses.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The principal component of Government financial assistance to the shipbuilding industry in the north-east over the last 10 years has been support since nationalisation for British Shipbuilders (BS). Such support is not allocated to specific areas of specific categories of cost. But in considering the external finance requirements of the industry, forecast cash flow which takes account of losses is an important factor. The published accounts of BS merchant shipbuilding subsidiaries in the north-east, recorded total trading losses in the period 1978-79 to 1983-84 of about £170 million, including future loss provisions and after crediting payments of intervention fund.

Regional Aid

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry which service industries in particular will benefit from regional development allocations under his restructured regional aid policy.

Mr. Trippier: Under the new regional development grant scheme grant will be payable towards carrying out approved projects which involve the provision of new capital assets or the net creation of new jobs in development areas. One of the criteria which must be satisfied before a project can be approved is that it must relate wholly or mainly to qualifying activities.

The qualifying activities for the purposes of the new scheme are set out in the Regional Development Grant (Qualifying Activities) Order 1984 (SI 1846). All the previous qualifying activities remain qualifying, and a few activities have become qualifying as a result of the use of the 1980 rather than the 1968 Standard Industrial Classification. In broad terms the new qualifying activities in the service sector are:

- Computer Services.
- Technical Services.
- Management Consultants and market research and public relations consultants (including exhibition contracting and organising).
- Administrative Headquarters.
- Advertising (excluding Bill posting agencies and window dressers).
- Venture capital providers.
- Credit card operations where they are the sole or main activity at a location.
- Export Houses.
- Repair (except for repair of consumer goods and vehicles, and dry cleaning and allied services).
- Refurbishment of manufactured goods for resale or exchange.
- Value-Added Network Services.
- Cable Television.
- Provision of goods and services by mail order.
- Freight forwarders and packers.
- Football pools.
- Research and Development work in the industrial field carried out in specialised research establishments.

Regional selective assistance will continue to be available on a discretionary basis for service industry projects in assisted areas which meet the criteria for such assistance.

Within the above framework the degree to which particular service industries will benefit will depend on the projects which are put forward by applicants.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will discuss with the countries of the European Community raising the current job grant limit sum of £3,300 allocated towards each new post created under his restructured regional aid scheme.

Mr. Trippier: The limit is prescribed by the European Commission under the powers given to it by article 93(1) of the treaty. I believe that the new Commission will wish to give early consideration to this general subject. The United Kingdom will naturally play its full part in the discussion of any proposals that might emerge.

EC (Industrial Funding)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what level of funding has been devoted towards British industries from the European Community budget since 1979; and which industries have derived most benefit from it.

Mr. Trippier: Since 1979 the United Kingdom has been allocated £307·5 million for industrial projects from the quota section of the European regional development fund. A further £121 million has been allocated under the non-quota section of the fund to aid small firms in steel, shipbuilding and textile areas, and border areas in Northern Ireland. The fund is designed to correct regional imbalances rather than to aid particular industries, and it would not be possible to determine which sectors of industry have benefited without disproportionate cost. Aid from the European social fund is principally the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Employment but £7·1 million has been paid from the social fund in respect of grants under the in-plant training scheme introduced under section 7 of the Industry Act 1972 on 1 April 1980.

Company Law

Mr. Freeman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will consider amendment to companies' legislation to permit public companies with substantial numbers of shareholders to hold a series of general meetings in different parts of the United Kingdom, all to constitute one annual general meeting subject to cumulative voting.

Mr. Fletcher: The Companies Acts impose very few restrictions on the holding of company meetings and it is not clear that changes in the law are, at present, necessary. However, I am always ready to consider ways and means of encouraging and facilitating shareholder participation in company affairs.

Technology (Financial Support)

Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what representations he has received following his announcement of a freeze on financial support programmes for technology; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: As at 14 December 22 written representations have been received from individuals, firms or organisations, commenting on the announcement by my hon. Friend on 12 November that, pending the completion of a review of policy in support of industrial research and development, no new applications could be considered for certain categories of project assistance.

As my hon. Friend explained at the time, collaborative projects for applied or seedcorn research can still be considered. Help for civil aviation, aero engine and space projects outside the support for innovation programme is not affected nor are other measures such as the teaching company scheme and the arrangements to help firms obtain expert consultancy and advice.

Loan Guarantee Scheme

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will make a statement on the future of the loan guarantee scheme.

Mr. Trippier: I made an announcement on the future of the loan guarantee scheme on 17 December 1984.

Industrial Capacity

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will make a statement on the current level of capacity utilisation in industry within the member states of the EEC and the EC as a whole;

(2) if he will make a statement on the level of productive potential in EEC member states and within the EEC as a whole.

Mr. Channon: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

EC (Industry-Steel Council Meeting)

Mr. Hickmet asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the European Community Industry-Steel Council of Ministers meeting held on 17 December.

Mr. Norman Lamont: The main issue at the Council, at which I represented the United Kingdom, was the Commission's proposal to make certain amendments to the steel aids code, intended to help achieve the central objective of terminating aids to steelmakers by the end of 1985. although some progress was made, agreement was not reached and discussion will be continued at a further Council planned for January. The Council also considered proposals for certain technical amendments to the ECSC article 58 quota arrangements, and will pursue this issue, too, in January. The Commission reported on the market situation in ferrous scrap, and said that there were no grounds at present for export controls, but that if the volume of EC exports increased beyond the current level of 6 million tonnes, if prices increased further and if there was a reduction in supplies to the Community market, the Commission would submit to the Council proposals for export restrictions.

The Council also reviewed the progress made to date in the field of telecommunications, and endorsed broad objectives giving direction to future work; agreed to study further the question of Community tariffs on consumer electronics and semi-conductors; and resolved a number of technical issues on the proposed Regulation on non-energy raw materials exploration loans.

Insurance Contracts

Mr. Lyell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry when he will bring forward legislation to reform the law on non-disclosure and breach of warranty in relation to insurance contracts affecting private consumers.

Mr. Fletcher: I am embarking on discussions with the insurance industry to see whether changes to their statements of insurance practice can be made to deal with problems in those areas. I shall review whether legislation is appropriate and feasible in the light of whatever changes may be agreed. I shall report the Government's conclusion to the House.

Steel Industry (Joint Ventures)

Mr. Coleman asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish in the Official Report a list of all the joint companies that have been established between private firms and the British Steel Corporation since May 1979 to the present date; if he will also give the total value of the British Steel Corporation assets concerned; and what amount the private sector paid for them.

Mr. Norman Lamont [pursuant to his reply, 19 December 1984, c. 249]: The joint companies formed between the British Steel Corporation and private firms since May 1979 and which are currently in existence are as follows:

Name of company	Date of formation
Teesside Slag Ltd.	October 1979
Firth Brown Fox Ltd.	October 1979
Allied Steel and Wire (Holdings) Ltd.	March 1981
Offshore Castings Ltd.	May 1981
Hobbs Cornelly Ltd.	March 1982
Catena Ltd.	April 1982
Sheffield Forgemasters (Holdings) plc	July 1982
British Bright Bar Ltd.	December 1982
Hadfields (Holdings) Ltd.	June 1983
Seamless Tubes Ltd.	December 1983
Clyde Shaw Ltd.	January 1984
Flixborough Wharf Ltd.	January 1984
Cold Drawn Tubes Ltd.	March 1984

Not all these joint companies involved the transfer of BSC assets, and in some cases the basis of the joint companies was a pooling of assets with another company rather than a purchase of BSC assets by a new joint company. The total value of BSC assets transferred to the above list was approximately £195 million. The terms of private sector involvement in these ventures are commercially confidential.

TRANSPORT

Roads (Public Inquiries)

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he has any plans to modify the public inquiry procedure for major roads and motorways; and if he will make a statement.

Mrs. Chalker: My right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for Transport and the Environment will be considering whether any changes should be made in the light of the Civil Engineering Economic Development Committee's report on pre-construction procedures for motorway and trunk road schemes, which they have just received.

Driving Tests

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current waiting time for a driving test in Dundee; what are the comparable figures for each of the past three years; and what are the corresponding figures for Scotland.

Mrs. Chalker: The figures for an L driving test are:

	Dundee weeks	Scotland weeks
14 December 1984	16	14
16 December 1983	10	7
17 December 1982	4	7
18 December 1981	9	9

More examiners are being recruited for Scotland to bring down waiting periods.

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the current first-time percentage pass rate for each driving test centre in Scotland.

Mrs. Chalker: The information is not available. The pass rate for all candidates taking their test in the Scottish traffic area in 1983 was nearly 51 per cent. Nationally the figure was just over 49 per cent.

Bourton and Zeals Bypass

Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will announce the date of the publication of draft order proposals for implementation of the Bourton and Zeals bypass.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I am unable at this stage to give a firm date for publication of the draft orders, but if present progress is maintained I hope that this will be achieved during the latter part of next year.

Weighbridges

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) what alternative facilities are available to serve drivers wishing to weigh their loads before leaving British ports, in the event of his Department's axle weighbridge facilities being closed; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what hours his Department's axle weighbridges are open for use each day; and whether such facilities are open seven days a week.

Mrs. Chalker: In addition to public weighbridges and private weighbridges which haulage companies have installed for their own use, my Department is equipping its own axle weighbridges at ports with a driver self-weigh facility which is available at all times when the site is not being used for enforcement.

My Department's weighbridge check sites are used at varying times for enforcement checks by each of the three enforcement agencies concerned with overloading.

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Transport (1) whether his Department plans to install weighbridge facilities in those ports which do not currently possess them;

(2) if he will list in the Official Report those major ports which have his Department's axle weighbridge facilities and those which do not.

Mrs. Chalker: Dynamic axle weighbridges have been provided at the following ports:
Felixstowe
Plymouth
Poole
Portsmouth
Dover East
Dover West
Sheerness
Newhaven

My Department has proposals for providing further axle weighbridges at the following ports in consultation with the port authorities:
Hull
Immingham
Fishguard
Pembroke Dock
Ramsgate
Southampton
Heysham

East London Road Assessment

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Transport which Government policies are referred to in the statement in his Department's press notice No. 527 on the east London road assessment study to which the road study is to have regard.

Mrs. Chalker: As the Government's various White Papers, statements and legislation have all made clear, our overall aim is to cater for the movement of goods and people more cost-effectively within the resources available, having regard to environmental and other considerations.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will arrange to publish all the responses he receives to the consultation on the east London road assessment study.

Mrs. Chalker: No. It will be for the individuals concerned to decide if they wish to publish their views.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will define the phrase "essential lorry" as used in his Department's press notice No. 527 on the east London road assessment study.

Mrs. Chalker: Essential lorries are those which form part of the necessary commercial and industrial traffic.

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will define the word "corridor" as used in his Department's press notice No. 527 on the east London road assessment study.

Mrs. Chalker: As the press notice concerned makes clear, the word "corridor" means an area through which longer distance traffic movement in London takes place.

A7 (Improvement)

Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether, following recent major improvements to that section of the A7 trunk route just north of the Scottish border, he will examine as a matter of urgency the need for an improvement scheme to that section of the route immediately south of the border.

Mrs. Chalker: Trunk routes in the area are constantly monitored. I have no current proposals for improvement of the A7 south of the border.

Manchester Airport

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish in the Official Report the representations he has received from individuals and organisations in the north-west region, advocating increased use of Manchester airport.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Railways (London)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish a map of all railway lines in London, showing those in use for passenger and goods, passenger only, goods only, those serviceable but not used and those not serviceable but capable of being brought back into use.

Mr. David Mitchell: No. The hon. Member may wish to ask British Rail and London Regional Transport for information about lines of theirs which are of particular interest to him.

Settle-Carlisle Railway

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the future of the Settle to Carlisle railway line.

Mr. David Mitchell: British Rail has published a proposal to withdraw passenger services from this line. The proposal is being dealt with in accordance with the procedures laid down by Parliament. Objections from users will, therefore, be considered by the appropriate transport users consultative committees, which will report to my right hon. Friend on any hardship they consider withdrawal would cause. My right hon. Friend will then decide whether to give his consent to the proposal, having regard to all the relevant factors, including social and economic considerations.

Airport Investment

Mr. Silvester asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he is in a position to announce the capital expenditure allocations for local authority airport investment for 1985-86.

Mr. Michael Spicer: I have decided to designate as projects of national and regional importance the following new airport investment schemes and to make the appropriate capital expenditure allocations for 1985-86.

The total public expenditure provision for 1985-86 for local authority investment in airports will amount to £31 million.

Vehicle Testing

Mr. Iain Mills asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will publish figures for each year since 1979 relating to (i) the number of Ministry of Transport tests carried out on cars, (ii) the number of cars which failed the Ministry of Transport test, (iii) the number of cars which have failed the Ministry of Transport test partly or wholly as a result of having illegal tyres and (iv) the number of persons prosecuted for being in possession of a car with illegal tyres.

Mrs. Chalker [pursuant to her reply, 19 December 1984, c. 182]: The figures for MOT testing in (i) to (iii) of the following table are based on a 2 per cent. sample of all MOT tests. Details of prosecutions at (iv) are published by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department.

	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983
(i) Number of cars (including 3-wheelers) tested	13,740,450	12,355,550	13,040,850	12,457,000	12,970,950

(iv) Number of persons successfully prosecuted	78,824	87,640	90,910	91,104	86,678

ENERGY

British National Oil Corporation

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will discontinue the practice of permitting the British National Oil Corporation to take oil in kind in a period of over supply.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: I have powers, under licence model clauses, to require licensees to make deliveries of petroleum in place of royalties. My policy on the use of these powers is kept under review but presently remains as my right hon. Friend the Member for Blaby (Mr. Lawson) told the House on 30 June 1982, at column 306. The BNOC acts as my agent in disposing of royalty oil taken in kind, and the proceeds thereof are remitted to me.

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he has any plans to wind up the British National Oil Corporation or to abolish mandatory participation rights.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given on 1 August to the hon. Member for Renfrew, West and Inverclyde (Mrs. McCurley), on 1 August, at column 295.

Chemical Industry

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he is prepared to recommend any special arrangements for the chemical industry in its use of electricity to prevent migration of firms to France to take advantage of cheaper tariffs prevailing there.

Mr. Goodlad: No, not specifically for the chemical industry; but I would refer to the answer given to another question from my hon. Friend today on large industrial users of electricity.

Nuclear Power Stations

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list the nuclear power stations under construction with expected capacities and dates of completion and those planned specifying the capacity envisaged.

Mr. Goodlad: One nuclear power station is currently under construction by the CEGB. This station, Heysham II, is an advanced gas cooled reactor, with two 660 megawatt reactors. It is expected to be completed during 1987-88. In addition, on 30 January 1981, the CEGB submitted an application to build a pressurised water reactor of 1110 megawatts capacity at Sizewell B. This application is currently the subject of a public inquiry. Details of the proposed station are given in the board's proof of evidence to the inquiry. Matters concerning power stations in Scotland are the responsibility of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland.

Sizewell

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Energy, of the total anticipated cost of the projected Sizewell pressurised water reactor at £1,147 million, what value of order he estimates will be placed in the United Kingdom and allocated to contractors abroad, respectively.

Mr. Goodlad: The Central Electricity Generating Board expects that approximately 7 per cent. of the total cost of the Sizewell B project would be accounted for by contracts placed abroad. Of these contracts, about half of the value would be for plant and equipment, and the remainder for licence fees, software and other services.

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Energy what he assesses to be the value of uranium fuel used in Sizewell B.

Mr. Goodlad: Approximately 5,400 tonnes of uranium would be required to fuel the station over its expected lifetime. The value would depend on market prices in future years.

Oil Supplies

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will take steps to reduce the amount of oil at the British National Oil Corporation's disposal during periods of over-supply.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: BNOC's contractual rights under the participation agreements do not entitle the corporation to vary its volumes at short notice. I expect the corporation at all times to exercise due commercial prudence in making commitments for the purchase of oil.

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Energy what has been the total cost to the Exchequer of the Government's attempt to stabilise the oil market through British National Oil Corporation.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: No estimate can be given on costs or benefits to the Exchequer because we do not know how the price, and therefore tax revenues on oil production, would have developed in the absence of action by BNOC in the interests of stabilisation in 1978-80, 1983 and 1984.

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Energy whether he plans to make further provision by way of amendments of the Energy Act 1976 to secure oil supplies at all material times.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: No.

Electricity Supplies (Costs)

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he proposes to give further assistance to large industrial users of electricity by encouraging the Central Electricity Generating Board to make special purchases of coal dedicated to reducing the cost of electricity to such users.

Mr. Goodlad: I am concerned that British industry as a whole should be able to obtain the most favourable tariffs possible, taking account of costs and other constraints within which the electricity supply industry operates. Load management schemes introduced by the industry in recent years have contributed to making their industrial tariffs competitive with those in other EEC countries, with the exception of France, where generating costs are considerably lower. The Electricity Council is considering a number of proposals for the extension of those schemes, and financial allowance for them is incorporated in next year's external financing limit announced last month for the industry. I understand that the council is also examining with the CEGB the possibility referred to by the hon. Member.

NCB Enterprise Scheme

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for Energy what criteria are used to determine whether a mining area is eligible for assistance from the National Coal Board enterprise scheme.

Mr. David Hunt: Allocation of the resources available to NCB (Enterprise) Ltd. is a matter for the new company. The National Coal Board has stated that the pupose of the company is to help create new business opportunities and provide alternative jobs in coal industry areas were unemployment is already substantial.

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for Energy if the Barnsley metropolitan council area will qualify for assistance under the National Coal Board enterprise scheme.

Mr. David Hunt: Allocation of the resources available to NCB (Enterprise) Ltd. is a matter for the new company. I shall ask the chairman to write to the hon. Member.

Coal-firing Scheme

Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement upon the future of the coal-firing scheme.

Mr. Peter Walker: Regrettably, the current industrial dispute in the coal industry has, I believe temporarily, affected confidence in making investment in new coal-fired boilers and the amount of money committed in grants under the coal firing scheme has not yet reached the scheme's £75 million ceiling. My Department will therefore continue to consider applications for coal firing grants made after 31 December 1984. The existing ceiling however remains unchanged. Exchange risk cover will also continue to be available on ECSC loans for conversion to coal from gas or oil. The Commission of the European Communities is being informed of these changes.

Coal Industry

Mr. Merchant asked the Secretary of State for Energy how much Government financial assistance has been given to the coal industry in the north-east of England in the last 10 years to offset working losses.

Mr. David Hunt: In the 10 years 1974-75 to 1983-84 collieries in the NCB's north-east area made an operating loss of some £258 million.

HOME DEPARTMENT

"Protect and Survive"

3. Sir Anthony Kershaw asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to publish an updated version of "Protect and Survive".

Mr. Giles Shaw: Work is in hand on a replacement for "Protect and Survive". It cannot be finalised until the review of the blast and radiation effects of nuclear weapons is available. This should be early next year.

36. Mr. Hayes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will study the Swedish equivalent to the "Protect and Survive" booklet.

Mr. Giles Shaw: We keep closely in touch with civil defence in other European countries, including Sweden. My right hon. and learned Friend is aware of and has already examined this booklet.

49. Mr. Hanley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will include information on the properties of and protection against chemical weapons in any revised edition of "Protect and Survive".

Mr. Giles Shaw: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply given on 20 November, at column 105, to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Norwich, North (Mr. Thompson). It will be included when this work is complete.

Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what aspects of civil defence he intends to include in his new version of "Protect and Survive".

Mr. Giles Shaw: It will cover those areas of civil defence which would be of direct relevance to the public including the action the public could take for protection against the effects of hostile attack and information on these effects and the complementary action that would be taken by local and central Government.

Entry Clearance Applications

14. Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many husbands of British citizens wives have been refused permission in 1984 to enter for purposes of settlement; and in how many of these cases the primary purpose rule was the main reason.

Mr. Waddington: In the first three quarters of 1984 in the Indian subcontinent, 190 husbands of British citizen wives were refused entry clearance for leave to enter the United Kingdom. One hundred and seventy husbands were refused solely because the primary purpose of the marriage was to obtain admission to the United Kingdom, and a few were refused partly because of this reason. Some of these applications may be subsequently granted on appeal. Data on entry clearance applications outside the Indian subcontinent are not available.

18. Mr. Litherland asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the proportion of husbands accepted for settlement from the Indian subcontinent in 1982; and what is the figure for the most recent 12 months.

Mr. Waddington: About two thirds of husbands who applied in the Indian subcontinent were granted entry clearance for leave to enter the United Kingdom in 1982, and a similar proportion were granted entry clearance in the 12 months up to September 1984.

Visitors (Entry Statistics)

15. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications to visit the United Kingdom were refused entry certificates or admission at ports of entry; and what proportion was from the Indian subcontinent.

Mr. Waddington: In the first nine months of this year, 540 people were refused prior entry clearance as visitors in the Indian subcontinent. No figures are available for applications made in other countries.

In the same period, a total of 13,400 passengers were refused leave to enter the United Kingdom at ports, of whom 21 per cent. were citizens of countries in the Indian subcontinent. Figures are not separately available for those seeking entry as visitors.

Privatisation (Departmental Savings)

16. Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what are the current estimated savings by his Department for 1984-85 as a result of privatisation schemes.

Mr. Mellor: It is estimated that about £1·9 million will be saved in 1984-85 as a result of contracting out to the private sector services previously provided by civil servants.

Coal Industry Dispute

17. Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is his most recent estimate of the cost of policing the mining dispute; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brittan: For the purpose of the Winter Supplementary Estimates we have estimated the additional expenditure up to the end of October at about £140 million.

25. Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, in view of the continuing coal industry dispute, what consultations he has had with chief constables in regard to contingency plans to maintain adequate police cover over the Christmas period; and what costs are involved.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. and learned Friend has had no such consultations. The deployment of police officers is a matter for the chief officer of police concerned and I know that chief officers are well aware of the need to maintain adequate cover over the Christmas period.

33. Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he last met the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis to discuss the use of Metropolitan police during the miners' strike; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. and learned Friend has had no occasion to discuss this with the Commissioner.

40. Mr. Marlow asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is satisfied with the protection available to those currently working in the mining industry.

Mr. Giles Shaw: My right hon. and learned Friend is satisfied that chief constables are fully aware of the problem of intimidation and the need to protect those currently at work in the coal industry.

Civil Defence

19. Mr. Bevan asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he proposes to amend the Civil Defence Regulations 1983 to require local authorities to make further efforts to recruit and organise civil defence volunteers.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No. My right hon. and learned Friend considers the present requirement in the 1983 regulations for local authorities to recruit, train, and exercise volunteers is sufficient.

20. Mr. Martin Stevens asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many lives he estimates could be saved by a limited civil defence evacuation policy.

60. Mr. Neil Thorne asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he has considered the effect of a limited civil defence evacuation policy on casualty levels.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No dependable detailed estimates can be made. The number would vary substantially according, for example, to the ambitiousness of the scheme; how successful in the event planners proved to be at predicting targets; the number, size and long as well as short-term effects of the weapons used; and the nature of the reception arrangements for evacuees.

22. Mr. Alan Howarth asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if Her Majesty's Government will make it their policy to plan for limited evacuation of the civil population from high-risk areas in wartime.

26. Mr. Maginnis asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if Her Majesty's Government will make it their policy to plan for limited evacuation of the civilian population from high-risk areas in wartime.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I refer the hon. Members to the reply which my right hon. and learned Friend gave earlier today to my hon. Friends the Members for Derby, North (Mr. Knight) and Dulwich (Mr. Bowden).

30. Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will review his Department's civil defence policy in the light of recent evidence concerning the possible climatic effects of nuclear explosions.

37. Mr. Strang asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when the Government intend to publish their investigations into the nuclear winter findings.

42. Mr. McKelvey asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he intends to publish the findings of the Government's investigations into the possibilities of nuclear winter and its effects following a nuclear exchange.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The evidence referred to concerns an unvalidated hypothesis known as the "nuclear winter" which is still the subject of research in the United States and elsewhere. This work is being monitored closely by the Government. We will review policy as appropriate when the findings are known.

44. Mr. Jessel asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what action he is taking to implement the recommendations made to him by Sir Leslie Mavor regarding the role of local authorities on the organising of civil defence volunteers.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Sir Leslie Mavor's recommendations on organisation form the basis for the guidance to local authorities in Home Office circular No. ES 2/1981 and the draft consolidated circular, both of which are in the Library of the House.

47. Mr. Clay asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the basis for the Government's assessment that the most likely threat of attack is from conventional strikes as stated in his Department's circular ES1/1984 on planning assumptions.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The basis is the present NATO assessments as to the likely course of any future war in Europe.

56. Dr. Blackburn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will support a standard recommended organisation for local authority civil defence volunteers.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply given earlier today to questions from my hon. Friends the Members for Harrogate (Mr. Banks) and for Windsor and Maidenhead (Dr. Glyn).

58. Mr. Aspinwall asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what assistance the principal of the Civil Defence college, Easingwold, will receive in carrying out his parallel role of co-ordinator of voluntary effort in civil defence.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The co-ordinator will have available the resources of the Civil Defence college and the support of the recently appointed Civil Defence Adviser. He will also be assisted by the recommendations of the working party on the standardisation of volunteer training, on which local authorities are represented.

59. Mr. Cash asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he consults the Society of Industrial Emergency Services Officers on measures to improve the civil defence capability of industry.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No. Ensuring that the civil defence capability of industry is improved is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. My right hon. and learned Friend the Home Secretary addressed the annual general meeting of the Society on 28 November 1984, when he was able to reaffirm the Government's commitment to improving the state of civil defence preparedness in all areas of our national life.

North London Polytechnic

21. Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what has been the cost of policing the North London polytechnic in the past 12 months; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis tells me that very little overtime has been incurred in the policing of the disorders at the polytechnic. The additional cost to public funds is therefore minimal.

Special Entry Vouchers

23. Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many people in India have applied for special vouchers to enter the United Kingdom; and what are the delays in granting such vouchers.

Mr. Waddington: As at 31 October 1984, the total number of applications for special vouchers made in India since the introduction of the scheme in 1968 was 13,800. Some cases are dealt with urgently on compassionate grounds, but the average time for which persons offered vouchers at the end of October 1984 in India had waited was seven years 10 months. Waiting times for new applicants are not forecast because they may be affected substantially by unforeseen developments.

Naturalisation

24. Mr. Bidwell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how long applications for naturalisation from the London area take to be processed.

Mr. Waddington: The information requested is not available. No record of applicants according to place of residence is kept.

41. Mr. Rogers asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many applications for naturalisation have been refused in each of the last five years.

Mr. Waddington: The figures are as follows:

Naturalisation

Year	No. of applications refused
1979	556
1980	1,119
1981	895
1982	1,121
1983	819

Sunday Trading

27. Mr. Hunter asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the recommendations of the Auld committee on Sunday trading.

Mr. Lyell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to make a statement on the report of the Auld committee on Sunday trading.

39. Sir William van Straubenzee asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he proposes to introduce legislation to implement the proposals of the Auld report on Sunday trading.

45. Mr. Montgomery asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to make a statement on the report of the Auld committee on Sunday trading.

48. Mr. Neil Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is now in a position to make a statement about the repeal of the Shops Act.

Mr. Mellor: As my right hon. and learned Friend informed the House in answer to questions on 22 November at columns 392-93, he hopes to make a statement to the House in the early part of next year.

43. Mr. Dykes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what representations he has now received from the public and from interested parties such as trade associations for and against Sunday opening of shops following publication of the Auld committee report.

Mr. Mellor: Following the publication of the Auld committee report on Sunday trading we have received four letters from retailers, one from a trade association, and four from the public favouring Sunday opening. We have also received 113 from members of the public and one letter from a trade association against Sunday opening.

Police Constables (Training)

28. Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what financial provision has been made for the training of police constables in each of the years 1982, 1983 and 1984.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The costs of training vary from force to force, and information on the total cost is not collected centrally. Hoever, the costs of the six Home Ofice district training centres, which provide initial training courses for recruits to provincial police forces, totalled £9,974,727 in 1982-83; £10,779,490 in 1983-84; expenditure is estimated at £10,540,000 for 1984-85.

Drugs (Unlawful Supplies)

29. Mr. Favell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of those convicted for the unlawful supply of drugs received custodial sentences in each of the last five years for which figures are available.

Mr. Mellor: The proportions given custodial sentences, including suspended sentences, in the United Kingdom for the unlawful supply of controlled drugs were as follows:

	Per cent.
1979	51
1980	53
1981	51
1982	54
1983	57

Coke and Iron Ore Lorries (Inquiry)

31. Mr. Ray Powell asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the result of the inquiry regarding the convoys of lorries carrying coke and iron ore using the M4 between Port Talbot and Llanwern; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I am not aware of any such inquiry.

Jersey, Guernsey and Isle of Man

32 Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proposals he is currently considering in relation to the constitutional position of Jersey, Guernsey and the Isle of Man in relation to the United Kingdom.

Mr. Giles Shaw: None.

Concessionary Television Licences

34. Mr. Phillip Oppenheim asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he plans to review the present system of concessionary television licences.

Mr. Giles Shaw: We are constantly looking to see if there are ways in which the concessionary licensing arrangements can be improved.

Tamils

35. Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Tamils have benefited from the moratorium on removal from the United Kingdom to Sri Lanka.

Mr. Waddington: Since the end of April 1984 no Sri Lankan Tamil who has expressed a fear of return to Sri Lanka has been deported or removed. In about 85 cases deportation or removal action has been suspended. In about 300 other cases applications for asylum are still under consideration.

Air Weapons

38. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has any plans to repeat the media campaign conducted in 1983 warning against the misuse of air weapons.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Not at present, but my right hon. and learned Friend will consider the position again when the statistics on air weapon offences committed during and after the campaign become available.

Obscene Video Films

46. Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many convictions there have been for offences relating to obscene video films in each quarter of the last two years for which figures are available.

Mr. Mellor: The records available centrally do not distinguish separately offences involving video films. Figures, which may be incomplete, for offences of possession of obscene material, and so on, are published annually under offence classification 86 in "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables" —in vol. 1, table S1.1(A) for magistrates' courts and vol. 2, table 2.1(A) for the Crown court.

Burglary

50. Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he is satisfied that sufficient police manpower is devoted to the prevention and detection of burglary in London.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The prevention and detection of burglary is a central feature of the strategy of the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis, which has our full support. The deployment of the available manpower for particular purposes is a matter for the Commissioner.

53. Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he is taking to seek to improve the clear-up rate for burglaries (a) in the Metropolitan police area generally and (b) in 'J' Division specifically.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras, (Mr. Dobson) on 28 November, at column 493. I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that he has introduced a number of initiatives, all of which have been adopted in 'J' district, to further police effectiveness by focussing investigation of burglary on those cases most amenable to detection: these include the operation since 1982 of units at area level specially trained to deal with certain types of burglary such as those involving bogus officials; the introduction in 1983 of burglary case screening; and the establishment earlier this year of local units to collate forensic and other information to identify related offences.

Fines (Non-payment)

51. Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the present number of people in prison in England and Wales for the non-payment of fines.

Mr. Mellor: About 800 fine defaulters were in prison department establishments in England and Wales on 31 October 1984, the latest date for which information is available. This figure includes those in default of payment of compensation orders and costs.

Car Radios

52. Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will seek to introduce licence fees for car radios.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Brentwood and Ongar (Mr. McCrindle) on 13 November, at column 204.

India (Quota Vouchers)

54. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the present waiting time for interview for applicants for quota vouchers in India.

Mr. Waddington: Waiting times for new applicants are not forecast, because they may be affected substantially by unforseen development. However, apart from cases dealt with urgently on compassionate grounds, persons offered vouchers in India at the end of October 1984 had waited seven years 10 months in the queue.

Lotteries and Amusements Act 1976

55. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he expects to complete his review of the monetary limits specified in section 11 of the Lotteries and Amusements Act 1976.

Mr. Mellor: My right hon. and learned Friend expects to complete his review very shortly.

Drinking and Driving

57. Mr. Colvin asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance his Department is giving police forces regarding drinking and driving over the Christmas and holiday period.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No special advice is necessary. Arrangements for dealing with drink-drive offences over the holiday period are the responsibility of chief officers of police. National publicity designed to discourage drinking and driving over the period is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Transport.

Custodial Remand (Psychiatric Reports)

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many people in the last year for which figures are available were remanded in custody for psychiatric reports; and what is the number so far in 1984;

(2) what is the average time taken to complete a psychiatric report on a remanded prisoner;

(3) what is the number of persons currently on remand in custody for psychiatric report.

Mr. Mellor: The information requested is not recorded centrally. Figures are available for the number of psychiatric reports prepared annually on prisoners remanded in custody for medical assessment, which would not necessarily correspond to the number of persons so remanded. There were 8,193 such reports prepared in 1983; figures for the current reporting period (which will extend to March 1985) are not yet available.

Plastic Baton Rounds

Miss Maynard asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will now take steps to withdraw plastic baton rounds from all police forces in England and Wales.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No. I would refer the hon. Member to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry) on 7 December at columns 306-7.

Longmoor Base (Police Operation)

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he has now received reports from the chief constable of Hampshire police concerning the police operation in the area of Longmoor base, Hampshire, between Thursday 15 November and Tuesday 20 November; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: This reply also includes information pursuant to my reply on 29 November, at column 546.

My right hon. and learned Friend has now received and considered a report from the chief constable. The chief constable reports that Mrs. Badcock and her daughter were arrested by soldiers on the evening of 16 November, on military land near Longmoor camp, for trespassing on military land. At the time of their arrest Mrs. Badcock and her daughter were some distance from the military holding areas which were being used for handling people arrested for intruding on military land. Police officers at the scene agreed to transport Mrs. Badcock and her daughter to the holding area in their vehicle because of the distance involved and, on arrival at the holding area, handed them over to the military to be processed. Later, they were handed over to the police and were removed from the military land and released without charge.

Police officers were not guarding Longmoor base.

Winson Green Prison

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department, pursuant to the answer of the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Official Report, 27 November, column 421, whether any letters from these three prisoners have been delayed by the governor of Winson Green prison or his staff at any time.

Mr. Mellor: The reading and examination of prisoners' correspondence under the prison rules naturally imposes some delay. If letters are written in a foreign language it may also be necessary to arrange for their translation before prison staff examine them.

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether all inmates at Winson Green prison have been informed that they can see the dentist who attends twice weekly and can ask for a routine dental examination.

Mr. Mellor: No. All inmates are informed at their reception boards that if they have any medical problems they should report sick to their landing officer.

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department on how many days the governor of Winson Green prison has been absent from the prison during 1984.

Mr. Mellor: Mr. Kendrick, the governor of Winson Green prison, Birmingham, has been absent from the prison on 199 days during 1984.

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many prisoners on remand were segregated from other prisoners or put in solitary confinement at Winson Green prison during November; and whether there is any reference to his noble Friend, Lord Elton, in any records concerning their segregation or solitary confinement.

Mr. Mellor: The information readily available indicates that a total of 13 unsentenced prisoners were segregated at Birmingham prison during the month of November under prison rule 43 for their own protection and a total of 10 unsentenced prisoners were segregated under the same rule in the interests of good order and discipline. My noble Friend will write to the hon. Member with the further information he requested as soon as possible.

Prison Visits

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many queries or requests for advice were received by his Department about the administration of the assisted prison visits scheme during September; and from whom.

Mr. Mellor: Two in writing: one from a local DHSS office and the other from a member of the public. No record is kept of telephone inquiries.

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what was the cost of the assisted prison visits scheme during the financial year 1983-84.

Mr. Mellor: Payments to claimants under this scheme are made by the Department of Health and Social Security, which is then reimbursed by the Home Office. The total paid by the Home Office under the scheme in the financial year 1983-84 was £637,793.

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the definition of close relative for the assisted prison visits scheme.

Mr. Mellor: There is no statutory definition, but under this scheme the following may be regarded as close relatives of the prisoner to be visited: wife, husband, parents, children, step-parents, step-children, brothers, sisters, step-brothers, step-sisters and a common-law spouse where the couple have been living together as man and wife for a substantial period or where they have a child.

Mr. Mohammed Siddique

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) pursuant to the answer of the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State Official Report, 3 December, column 2, when his noble Friend will write to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Hodge Hill, about the refusal of prison officers at Winson Green prison to allow an unconvicted prisoner on remand to wear his own shirt during a period of relaxation outside his prison cell;

(2) pursuant to the answer of the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State, Official Report, 29 November, column 545, when the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State will write to the hon. Member for Birmingham, Hodge Hill.

Mr. Mellor: My noble Friend is writing to the hon. Member today.

EUROPEAN COMMUNITY

Council of Ministers

Mrs. Rumbold asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a statement of forthcoming business in the European Community Council of Ministers.

Mr. Rifkind: The usual written forecast was deposited in the House earlier today. At present four meetings of the Council of Ministers are planned for January.

The Agriculture Council is expected to meet on 14-15 January to consider the reform of the wine regime, which includes structural measures for Greece in the light of the conclusions reached at the Dublin European Council; beef imports from third countries under GATT; and the administration of the milk supplementary levy. Ministers may also consider agricultural structures, including aids for investment in agricultural holdings, measures for forestry and the protection of the environment.

The Fisheries Council is due to meet on 22 January to consider arrangements with Norway for the allocation of North sea herring; member states' quotas in Greenland waters for 1985; trilateral management with Norway and Sweden of joint stocks in the Skagerrak and Kattegat and, possibly, relations with Mauritania and Madagascar.

The Foreign Affairs Council is due to meet on 28-29 January to prepare the Community position for negotiations with Spain and Portugal. It will also discuss the draft new own resources decision.

There is to be an Industry Council towards the end of January to consider the Community's steel aids code and, possibly, state aids to industry.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Law of the Sea Convention

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what representations he has received from, and what discussions he has initiated with, any United Kingdom entity or mining company about seabed mining in connection with the United Nations convention on the law of the sea.

Mr. Rifkind: The Foreign and Commonwealth Office has kept in close touch with the United Kingdom entities which have interests in deep seabed mining. So has the Department of Trade and Industry. We know of no potential United Kingdom operator who would wish to operate under the deep seabed mining regime presently proposed in the convention.

Hong Kong

Mr. David Young asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make it his policy to keep the House of Commons informed on a continuous basis on the implementation of the agreement between the United Kingdom and China on the future of Hong Kong, in a manner which enables right hon. and hon. Members to monitor its progress.

Mr. Luce: As I made clear to the House during the debate on Hong Kong on 5 December, we are conscious of the importance of keeping Parliament regularly informed over the implementation of the agreement on Hong Kong's future. I have no doubt that Parliament will maintain the interest in and commitment to Hong Kong that it has already clearly demonstrated.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what is the number of (a) men, (b) women, (c) young persons and (d) juveniles in prison in Hong Kong at the latest available date;

(2) what is the longest period of time served in custody on remand by a person currently remanded in prison in Hong Kong;

(3) what is the number of (a) men, (b) women, (c) young persons and (d) juveniles on remand in custody in Hong Kong at the latest available date;

(4) what is the number of mentally-disordered persons in prison in Hong Kong (a) on remand and (b) sentenced;

(5) if he is satisfied with conditions in penal establishments in Hong Kong; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce: The questions that the hon. Member has asked necessitate consultation with the Hong Kong Government and cannot be answered in the time available. A full reply will be published in the Official Report as soon as possible.

Namibia

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will review their policy with regard to the linkage of Cuban troop withdrawal from Angola and a settlement in Namibia; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: Cuban withdrawal was never part of Security Council resolution 435, nor do we accept that it should be a precondition for a settlement. But satisfactory arrangements for Cuban withdrawal would be helpful if a settlement is to be reached. We also believe that Cuban withdrawal, together with South African withdrawal from Namibia, will contribute to peace in the region. We therefore welcome current negotiations on this issue.

South Africa

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what contacts have been made by Her Majesty's Government with African Commonwealth countries in support of Her Majesty's Government's policy towards the Republic of South Africa.

Mr. Rifkind: There are frequent discussions with African and other Commonwealth countries about southern African problems, particularly South Africa and Namibia. Our firm belief that we can best assist the resolution of these problems by contact and dialogue is well understood.

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last met the ambassador of the Republic of South Africa; what subjects were discussed; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind; The South African ambassador called on my right hon. and learned Friend on 21 September, when he discussed bilateral questions, including the situation created by the presence of the six men who had sought refuge in our Durban consulate. The ambassador has subsequently called on other Ministers and senior officials.

Southern Africa

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether Her Majesty's Government propose making any changes in their policy in the light of recent peace initiatives in southern Africa including the Nkomati accord, the Lusaka agreement, the Pretoria declaration and continuing Namibian negotiations; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: We have welcomed the Nkomati accord, the Lusaka agreement and other recent initiatives in southern Africa which we hope will improve the prospects for peace and stability. We encourage contact and dialogue between the countries of southern Africa and, with other Western countries, shall continue to work for the peaceful resolution of the region's problems through patient diplomacy.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Student Travel

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what is the estimated saving on student travel as a result of new student travel regulations in Northern Ireland in the current academic year.

Mr. Scott: It is not yet possible to quantify actual savings, but it is estimated that they will be in the order of £150,000 to £200,000.

Secondary Schools

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if St. Columba's secondary maintained school in Portaferry is in receipt of additional scale score points in connection with the salaries being offered to teachers;

(2) which secondary schools in Northern Ireland have been granted additional scale score points in connection with the salaries being offered to teachers.

Student Grants

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if the Government intend to extend the proposals to change the student award regulations to Northern Ireland.

Mr. Scott: I am currently considering the implications for Northern Ireland students of the proposed changes in student award regulations for England and Wales.

Fair Employment Agency

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cases of individual discrimination have been found by the Fair Employment Agency in each year since its creation; and how many of these were against (a) Roman Catholics and (b) Protestants.

Dr. Boyson: The information is as follows:

Year	Number of findings of unlawful discrimination	Number of findings of discrimination against Catholics	Number of findings of discrimination against Protestants
1 September 1976—31 March 1978	1	1	—
1 April 1978—31 March 1979	4	3	1

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many complaints about discrimination have been lodged with the Fair Employment Agency in each year since its creation.

Dr. Boyson: The information is as follows:

Year	Number of complaints registered
1 September 1976—31 March 1978	81

* Investigations in respect of 77 complaints remain to be completed.

Terrorism

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many cross-border terrorist incidents have occurred between Northern Ireland and the Irish Republic in each of the last five years.

Mr. Scott: It is not possible to say with any accuracy how many terrorist incidents may have involved activity across the border with the Irish Republic.

Trade Exhibition

Mr. Couchman asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will arrange for an exhibition about Northern Ireland trade to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Dr. Boyson: A provisional booking for a Northern Ireland exhibition in the Upper Waiting Hall of the House has been made for the week commencing Monday 28 January 1985. Special emphasis will be placed on the promotion of Trade and Industry.

Mrs. Norah McCabe

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will now set up an inquiry into the circumstances surrounding the death of Mrs. Norah McCabe on 9 July 1981.

Mr. Hurd [pursuant to his reply, 7 December 1984, c. 298]: Mrs. McCabe's tragic death in 1981 has been fully investigated by the police and all the papers and relevant evidence were submitted to the Director of Public Prosecutions, who directed that none of the officers involved should be prosecuted. Disciplinary proceedings have been considered and there has also been a coroner's inquest. I have considered carefully whether there are any issues arising from this particular case which should be examined in a further inquiry but have concluded that any such further examination would serve no useful purpose. I am concerned that plastic baton rounds should be subject to the closest control. I have reviewed the measures in force for their use. I will continue to receive reports describing the circumstances in which every round was fired. I am satisfied that the security forces are subject to strict regulations for the use of this weapon.

Young Help Scheme

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the Government feel it is acceptable or proper for areas of work to be undertaken solely by persons on the young help scheme rather than by permanent staff with the assistance of young helpers.

Mr. Chris Patten [pursuant to his reply, 17 December 1984, c. 63]: There is no requirement that volunteers under the young help scheme should undertake work only in situations where they are assisting permanent staff. It is of course expected that the organisation making use of the volunteer's services should provide suitable guidance on the duties to be undertaken.

Salmon

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what information he has as to the number of salmon which were taken by anglers in each stretch of the River Bush in each year since 1973 to the latest available date by (a) fly, (b) prawn, (c) worm and (d) spinning.

Dr. Boyson [pursuant to his reply, 19 December 1984, c. 209] : I would refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply I gave him on 21 November 1984, at column 206. Information of catches by specific methods of angling is not available.

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many salmon and grilse were taken by the fish trap on the River Bush at Bushmills in each year since 1973 for stripping; how many salmon parr were produced from those fish in each year; where they were used for restocking; how many salmon redds were counted in the Bush system in each of those years; and what was the estimated production of parr from those redds.

Dr. Boyson [pursuant to his reply, 19 December 1984, c. 209]: The following table indicates the numbers of adult salmon retained for stripping at Bushmills since 1973. The progeny of these adult fish is stocked as ova, fry, or as parr on one occasion in the case of the river Roe. Otherwise they are retained until the adult stage is reached. The smolt and ova production figures are presented in the table.

Among the locations which have been restocked with ova from this production are the rivers Bush, Margy, Shimna, Rooghan and the Roe and various other rivers throughout Ireland. One million fry have been stocked into the river Bush during 1982 and 1983 and 40,000 parr were restocked into the river Roe in 1983.

Roads

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what proportion of urban roads in the Province are lit; and by what form of electric lighting;

(2) what proportion of group A roads in Northern Ireland are lit; and by what form of electric lighting.

Mr. Chris Patten [pursuant to his reply, 19 December 1984, c. 213]: It is estimated that over 90 per cent. of urban roads are lit.

The classification "Group A" is not employed in relation to roads in Northern Ireland; of the class I category roads, it is estimated that 20 per cent. are lit.

High pressure sodium, low pressure sodium, high pressure mercury and fluorescent lanterns are used.

Irish Language

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what consideration he has given to applying in Northern Ireland the principles set out in the resolutions and reports adopted by the European Parliament on the rights of people respecting minority languages and cultures; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hurd [pursuant to his reply, 19 December 1984, c. 214]: Many of these principles are reflected in the Government's policies on education and on support for cultural activities.

WALES

Council House Sales

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish a table showing for Wales the gross receipts from council house sales under the right-to-buy legislation for 1979-80 to the latest available date.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The following table gives total receipts from council house sales (including new towns), net of associated mortgages. Receipts from sales under the right-to-buy legislation are not separately available.

Year	£ million
1980-81	8·3

West Glamorgan (Emigration)

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will publish in the Official Report the sources that his Department used to make the assumption that the net outward migration for the county of West Glamorgan will be 1,000 persons per annum between 1987 and 1996.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Migration assumptions used in the population projections prepared by my Department are based on:

i. statistics of re-registrations notified to the National Health Service central register;
ii. statistics of international migration recorded by the international passenger survey, and
iii. discussions with the representative of the county planning officer of West Glamorgan.

Town and Country Planning Applications

Mr. John asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list for the last five years for which figures are available the number of inquiries under town and country planning legislation in which the inspector has reported to him the result of town and country planning applications within (a) three days, (b) seven days, (c) 14 days and (d) 28 days of the date of the inquiry.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: This information is not recorded centrally. However, it is estimated that the time taken by inspectors to submit recommendations following inquiries on the complex planning cases to be determined by my right hon. Friend is generally more than 28 days.

Mr. John asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will give, for each of the last five years for which statistics are available, the percentage of inquiries under town and country planning legislation in which the inspector has reported to him the inspector's decision before his full report is available.

Mr. John Stradling Thomas: This information is not recorded centrally, but inspector's recommendations on planning cases to be determined by my right hon. Friend are generally conveyed only in their formal inquiry reports.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Jurors (Oath)

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Attorney-General if the Government have any plans to change the oath required to be taken by those engaged in juries in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

The Attorney-General: The Lord Chancellor has no plans to alter the form of this oath.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Providenciales Airport

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) why the new international airport at Providenciales has been closed for resurfacing of the runway; and if he will make a statement;

(2) how many aircraft movements have occurred at Providenciales airport since it was opened;

(3) if he will conduct an inquiry as to whether any person or firm was guilty of negligence in the design, planning and construction of the runway at Providenciales airport;

(4) if he will institute an inquiry to establish the cause of the runway at Providenciales airport requiring resurfacing and to establish liability; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Raison: An examination of the runway by an independent expert consulting engineer was commissioned by the Overseas Development Administration on behalf of the Turks and Caicos Islands Government in September 1984.

Cracks in the surface were found to be not structurally serious and not untypical of constructions to the pavement design used in this case. Performance was found to be normal for this type of construction. The application of a second sand seal was recommended as a form of maintenance to prevent any worsening of the cracks and to improve the texture of the surface. The airport has been closed to scheduled jet services from 29 November while this work is in progress. It is expected to re-open on 21 December. The airport has remained open throughout this period to local flights. There have been 18,540 aircraft movements between 1 August 1982, when the airport was first commissioned, and 30 November 1984.

Southern Africa

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether development projects in southern African countries will be affected by any changes made as a result of the recently revised aid budget; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Raison: The aid budget remains as projected. We shall continue our projects in these countries as planned.

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the nature of existing United Kingdom development and technical aid projects in southern Africa.

Mr. Raison: Our aid to countries in southern Africa is increasingly given in the form of technical co-operation and help to buy essential spares, raw materials and other maintenance goods, as well as for schemes in their public investment programmes. More details of our aid in 1983 are given on pages 8-15 and 72-84 of my Administration's annual report, of which I am sending my hon. Friend a copy.

Mr. Proctor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government will review their participation in development projects in southern African countries and in Mozambique in particular.

Mr. Raison: We regularly monitor the progress of the projects in which we participate in these countries.

Population (World Bank Report)

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what action he has taken on the recommendations of the 1984 report of the World Bank on population.

Mr. Raison: The main conclusions of the World Development report 1984 are consistent with the view of successive British Governments that population programmes are an important element in the development process.

The report calls for substantial increase in population spending in order to reduce global fertility rates. We have recognised the needs in this sector and announced that, subject to parliamentary approval, we intend to increase our contributions to multilateral population organisations by £1·45 million in 1985.

World Bank

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how often he or any other Ministers in his Department have met the executive director of the World Bank appointed by the United Kingdom to discuss the policies or reports of the World Bank.

Mr. Raison: I have met the United Kingdom executive director on two occasions during the past year. The Government's instructions are normally communicated to the executive director by letter and telegram, and not in the course of personal meetings.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Teachers (Assault)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many cases have been brought to his attention during the last 12 months involving the suspension of secondary school pupils for assault or grievous bodily harm on members of teaching staff.

Mr. Dunn: None formally.

Leigh Road School, Saltley

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he received all the information which he needed from the city of Birmingham council to take a decision on the proposed school at Leigh road, Saltley.

Mr. Dunn: The authority has provided information over a period of time in response to various requests from the Department; the final item was received on 3 December 1984. My right hon. Friend approved the proposals on 19 December 1984.

Drug Abuse

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether his Department issues any advice or guidelines to local education authorities concerning drug abuse by (i) pupils and (ii) teachers; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The Department issued general guidance on dealing with drug misuse, among other matters, in its 1977 publication, "Health Education in Schools". This included advice on the role of the teacher. Further advice was given this year in the Home Office publication "Prevention" to which Her Majesty's Inspectorate contributed.

Department of Education and and Science Ministers and officials are playing a full part in the interdepartmental group on the misuse of drugs and in that context we are considering urgently what further advice should be given to the education system. A number of possibilities are being studied.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Health Authorities (Resources)

Mr. Sackville asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how he proposes to distribute resources to health authorities in 1985-86.

Mr. Fowler: I am today informing regional health authorities how the extra cash to be provided for the Health Service in England next year is to be shared out. Nationally, the budget for health authorities will be 5·5 per cent. higher in 1985-86, but the increase for individual regions will vary because we are continuing the policy of redistributing resources between different parts of the country.

As a result, I have been able to give bigger revenue increases to regions which are relatively deprived or which have rapidly growing populations. These increases range up to almost 7 per cent. Yet the relatively well-funded Thames regions will still receive increases of 4·2 to 4·4 per cent. In addition, all regions will benefit from their programmes of cost-improvement and rationalisation. These programmes are achieving substantial benefits in the current year and we will be expecting the new general managers to extend and develop them rigorously next year. As a result health authorities should be able to develop services faster than the cash growth figures imply.

The capital allocations to regions will be 4·5 per cent. higher overall than this year and distributed mainly under the RAWP process. The table gives details. In addition to the allocations, I expect regions to generate substantially more resources from sales of surplus land and residential accommodation, which can also be used to carry through their capital investment plans.

Health Authority Resource Distribution 1985-86

Regional Health Authority	Revenue Increase per cent.	Capital RAWP share £ million
Northern	5·8	34·5
Yorkshire	5·9	47·8
Trent	6·8	51·2
East Anglia	6·3	20·4
North West Thames	4·2	34·1
North East Thames	4·2	39·8
South East Thames	4·4	40·5
South West Thames	4·4	31·1
Wessex	6·7	46·7
Oxford	6·3	23·1
South Western	6·3	44·5
West Midlands	6·4	73·7
Mersey	4·9	26·5
North Western	5·5	61·7
TOTAL	5·5	575·6

Notes:

1. The total capital allocation to regional health authorities in 1985-86 is £653·4 million, including dental hospital re-equipment; inner cities bias; strategic shifts; special and development schemes; and 35 per cent. teaching hospital support.
2. Cash figures are subject to parliamentary approval of the Department's estimates.

Asbestos

65. Mr. Hardy asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what health risks exist as a result of the recent deposition of asbestos on a substantial area of South Yorkshire; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that effective measures are under way to clear up the asbestos and the level of asbestos fibres in air measured in the area is very low. In the circumstances, the health risk to anyone is negligible.

Rheumatoid Arthritis

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he is taking to promote the role in the treatment of rheumatoid arthritis of the control of diet; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: Rheumatoid disease embraces a variety of conditions in relation to which diet can be an important factor. More specifically, research thus far has failed to establish any clear evidence to show that food allergies are a contributory factor in rheumatoid arthritis.

Drugs (Cost)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much the National Health Service has spent on the purchase of drugs from the pharmaceutical industry in 1984; and how this figure compares with that applicable to each year since 1979.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Total National Health Service expenditure attributable to the cost of drugs (excluding the cost of dispensing) was:

	£ million cash
1978-79	686
1979-80	792
1980-81	954

	£ million cash
1981-82	1,091
1982-83	1,257
1983-84*	1,399

* Provisional.

Perinatal Deaths

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he intends to take to ensure the registration records relating to perinatal deaths contain clinical information indicating the sequence of events preceding death.

Mr. John Patten: Discussions are now in progress with the relevant professions on modifying the medical certificates used for registering stillbirths and neo-natal deaths (that is, deaths in the first four weeks of life). By including in the certificates a more detailed description of adverse events and conditions arising in both the mother and the baby, it will be possible to record at registration the type of information with which the question is concerned. We hope that regulations will be made in time for the new certificate to apply to deaths registered in 1986.

"Wessex Feet"

Viscount Cranborne asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has received the survey "Wessex Feet" produced by the district chiropodists of Wessex; and if he has plans to publish it.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have just received a copy of the first volume of the report of the survey. I understand that the authors are still considering how it should be made more widely available.

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what discussions he has had regarding the likely effects on the investment programmes of the research-based pharmaceutical industry of his proposals to limit drugs prescribable on the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Eastleigh (Sir D. Price) on 18 December, at column 152.

Mr. David Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will publish a list of those medicines on his provisional list of drugs which are to be no longer prescribed under the National Health Service which do not have a generic alternative.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We will not finally decide which drugs will no longer be prescribable at public expense through the National Health Service until after our consultation with the medical and pharmaceutical professions, and the drugs industry, is complete.

Mental Patients (Group Homes)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many (a) health authorities, (b) social services authorities and (c) voluntary organisations have had to put group homes planned for the mentally handicapped and/or mentally ill in the community to different use because of adverse public reaction to their plans.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not available centrally. We are aware of occasional press reports, but we have no reason to believe that there are many instances where it has been felt necessary to change the use of such group homes because of adverse public reaction after construction or purchase. Many small local schemes enjoy strong local support in helping residents to integrate into the communities of which they are now part.

Medical Training

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if there is any action he will be taking on the recommendation from the Hospital Consultants and specialists association's inquiry that medical training should include specified minimum periods of study and practice in the non-acute sector.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have told the Hospital Consultants and Specialists Association that we share its concern that the less popular specialties should be adequately staffed by doctors of high quality. This would imply a broader range of experience and training, both undergraduate and postgraduate, which are matters for the General Medical Council, universities, royal colleges and other independent bodies responsible for the content of medical training.

Housing Benefit

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide his latest estimates for the total numbers of standard housing benefit recipients, differentiating as far as possible between those below and above pensionable age; and if he will estimate how many in each group are also liable for income tax.

Mr. Whitney: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of all those in receipt of standard housing benefit with an income (a) above the needs allowance and (b) below the needs allowance have children: and in each case what percentage of those below pensionable age have children.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to his reply, 17 December 1984, c. 49]: It is estimated that in Great Britain in autumn 1983, the latest date for which figures are available, 20 per cent. of all standard housing benefit recipients with income above the needs allowance had dependent children. The corresponding estimate of those with incomes below the needs allowance was 18 per cent. Of standard recipients below pensionable age, families with dependent children represented 49 per cent. of those with incomes above and 50 per cent. of those with incomes below the needs allowance.

Family Income Supplement

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will provide his latest estimates for the total number of family income supplement recipients, together with an estimate of how many of these are also liable for income tax; and if he will provide the same information for April 1984.

Mr. Whitney: It is estimated that some 210,000 recipients would be entitled to family income supplement in 1984 and of these some 75 per cent. would be liable for income tax at the date their claim was made. This is the latest information available.

Hospitals (Laundry Tenders)

Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) for the latest date for which information is available, how many hospital laundry tenders have been won by in-house bids after submission to competitive tender in England in the past 12 months;

(2) if he will give for the latest date for which information is available the details of savings on previous costs achieved by successful in-house bids for hospital laundry services in England;

(3) at the latest date for which the information is available, at which hospitals laundry services have been submitted to competitive tender in England in the past 12 months;

(4) at the latest date for which information is available, how many English hospital laundry contracts have been awarded to private commercial firms in the past 12 months;

(5) if he will give for the latest date for which information is available the cumulative total of savings arising in the past 12 months from the submission of hospital laundry services to competitive tender.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer my hon. Friend to my replies to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 30 October at column 967, and on 30 November at column 623-24.

Buckly Caller Office (Member's Correspondence)

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he proposes to answer the letter of the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside to his Department concerning the Buckly caller office closure of 1 June 1984 and the subsequent letter of 11 September 1984 from the hon. Member for Alyn and Deeside.

Mr. Newton: I am writing to the hon. Member about the case.

West Midlands RHA

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how often the Minister for Health has met the chairman of the West Midlands regional health authority during 1984; and how often these meetings have concerned the business of the West Midlands regional health authority.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I frequently meet Mr. Ackers and we seldom resist the temptation to discuss the affairs of the RHA.

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the terms of reference for the management consultants who are going to be appointed to review the organisation of the West Midlands regional health authority.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The terms of reference for this review have not yet been drawn up and agreed.

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when the present chairman of the West Midlands regional health authority was appointed; when his appointment will end; how much he is paid as chairman of the regional health authority; and how many days per week he spends on the business of the regional health authority.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Mr. James Ackers was appointed chairman of the West Midlands regional health authority on 1 August 1982. His term of office expires on 31 July 1986. He receives the usual honorarium of £8,424 a year. Chairmen's contributions to the running of their authorities cannot be measured in terms of days per week.

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the Minister for Health is now prepared to confirm the appointment of Mr. K. Bales as general manager of the West Midlands regional health authority.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Yes, I have agreed with the West Midlands regional health authority that a review should be carried out by outside consultants of the functions and working of the authority and the establishment of the general management function by the authority. This review will be guided by a steering committee drawn from members of the authority and on which an official of our Department will sit. Mr. Bales will be appointed as general manager for two years, at the end of which period the position will be reviewed. On this basis, the appointment was announced on 13 December.

Highcroft Hospital, Birmingham

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people have been patients at Highcroft hospital in north Birmingham for more than two years; and how many of these patients have not been examined by a dentist within the last two years.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not collect this sort of detailed local information centrally. The hon. Member may wish to approach the chairman of the North Birmingham health authority direct to obtain the information.

Long-stay Patients

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what arrangements exist to ensure that adequate records are maintained of the dental treatment received by long-stay patients in hospitals.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The maintenance of records of the dental treatment of long-stay patients in hospitals is the responsibility of the appropriate dental consultant who will seek to ensure that records are kept to acceptable professional standards.

Health Authorities (Managers' Contracts)

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if there is any difference between the contract given to the general manager of the West Midlands regional health authority and the contracts given to the general managers appointed by other regional health authorities.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Each general manager has an individual contract and there are a number of differences between most of them.

Striking Miners (Housing Benefit)

Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what allowance is available under the housing benefit regulations to unmarried miners on strike and living with their parents.

Mr. Newton: As a result of a defect in the Housing Benefits Regulations 1982, any person living with his parents might have been entitled to housing benefit if he was liable to make payments for board and lodging which included an amount in respect of rent and rates. This defect in the regulations was corrected by the Housing Benefits Amendment (No. 4) Regulations, which were laid before the House on 18 December and came into operation on 19 December.

Students (Benefits)

Mr. Alan Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many full-time students claimed the full householder rates of supplementary benefit during their vacations in each of the last four years.

Mr. Whitney: This information is not separately available.

Mr. Alan Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many full-time students have received housing benefit in each year since 1981.

Mr. Whitney: Information on the number of student claims for housing benefit is not collected by the Department.

Kidney Patients

Mr. Hanley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has now completed his discussions with regional health authorities on targets for the expansion of services for patients suffering end stage renal failure; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. John Patten: My right hon. Friend informed health authorities at the beginning of the year of the need for renal services to be developed as a priority within the acute sector. He told them of his intention to set targets against which the expansion of renal service provision would be monitored. The target for each region will be to accept new renal patients for treatment at a minimum annual rate of 40 per million total population by 1987. This will ensure that more patients are accepted for treatment and also that progress is made in raising the level of renal services in the less well provided parts of the country. We have consulted regional health authorities and I am pleased to say that all have agreed these targets as reasonable. South East Thames and South West Thames will be treated as a single region for the purposes of this exercise. I hope that in as many regions as possible the targets will be significantly exceeded, and it is the Government's intention that the provision of renal services will continue to expand after 1987.

Over the last five years we have increased the number of new renal patients accepted for teatment in the United Kingdom by 50 per cent.—from 1,233 (22·1 per million population) in 1979 to 1,846 (33·0 per million population) in 1983. This is a significant achievement, but more still needs to be done.

For most patients who suffer end stage renal failure, the preferred method of treatment is by kidey transplant. The factor limiting the expansion of kidney transplantation has been the availability of donor organs, so in February of this year we launched a new campaign to increase public awareness of the benefits of transplantation and to promote the organ donor card scheme.

The results of the first six months of the campaign were most encouraging; over 11 million new donor cards were distributed, and the number of kidney transplant operations performed was 40 per cent. up on the equivalent period in 1983, which was itself a record year. We hope to continue this progress in 1985.

EMPLOYMENT

Health and Safety

64. Sir Hector Monro asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has any plans to introduce legislation to require all industrial concerns to prepare effective emergency plans.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 places duties on employers to ensure that their operations are safe and without risk to health, so far as is reasonably practicable. The duty to provide a safe system of work requires many manufacturers to prepare emergency arrangements. In addition, the Control of Industrial Major Accident Hazards Regulations, which my right hon. Friend laid before Parliament on 18 December, contain a specific requirement for the operators of the larger and more hazardous installations to prepare formal on-site emergency plans; there is also a requirement on local authorities, at county level, to draw up off-site emergency plans for those sites within their boundaries.

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many persons violating the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 have been sent to prison during the 10 years that the Act has been in operation.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: As yet no sentences of imprisonment have been recorded.

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he will now introduce legislation to amend the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 whereby any case involving a death or serious injury is taken to Crown court; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Most offences under the Health and Safety at Work etc. Act 1974 can be tried either summarily or, if the defendant requests or the magistrates so decide, on indictment. There are no plans to amend the provisions of the Act relating to offences: however, the maximum fines available on summary conviction have recently been doubled.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Alton asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people in Liverpool are currently engaged in youth training schemes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: At the end of November 1984 there were 5,277 young people in training on the youth training scheme in the Liverpool local authority district.

In Liverpool, as well as nationally, the response to the scheme has been most encouraging and shows that young people recognise the advantages of participating in a high quality training programme.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he is satisfied with the evaluation of the social and life skills training element in the youth training scheme both inside and outside colleges of further education.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I am satisfied with the arrangements for the evaluation of the personal effectiveness and communications skills element of the youth training scheme.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he is satisfied with the qualifications of persons teaching the social and life skills training element in the youth training scheme both inside and outside colleges of further education; and if he will specify the qualifications he requires.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Those providing guidance and assisting in the development of personal effectiveness and communication skills in the workplace will not necessarily be formally qualified but will be responsible adults with experience of working life. We are satisfied that they have the qualities required for the job.

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many youngsters on youth training schemes were seriously injured at work at the latest available date in 1984.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The latest available information on the number of young people on the youth training scheme who have been involved in accidents is given in the following table:

Period	Accidents Injuries†*
	Fatalities	Major	Minor	Total
1 April 1983 to 31 March 1984	‡4	100	843	947
1 April 1984 to 30 September 1984	‖3	88	765	856

* Manpower Services Commission accident figures for the youth training scheme are compiled on a similar basis to those prepared by the Health and Safety Executive on employed persons. However, the figures quoted in the above table will include a number of accidents which did not occur "at work"; in particular, road traffic accidents during scheme time and accidents to trainees in educational situations or establishments, which may not have been reportable to HSE had the individuals been employed.

† Injuries are classified according to the severity criteria of the Notification of Accidents and Dangerous Occurances Regulations 1980.

School Leavers

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Employment what type of youth training scheme provision it is intended to make for school leavers who have completed a technical and vocational education initiative course.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The technical and vocational education initiative comprises individual pilot projects, the first of which began in September 1983, run by local education authorities. Each provides four-year programmes, starting at age 14, of general, technical and vocational education.

A young person completing a TVEI course would be aged 18 and therefore generally not eligible for the youth training scheme which, apart from some limited exceptions, is open only to 16-year-old school leavers and unemployed 17-year-old school leavers.

Many young people having gained basic work skills either within the educational system or through YTS, would go on to specific skills training, for which employers have the prime responsibility.

Adult Training

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the role of area manpower boards in relation to the adult training strategy.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Local responsiveness to training needs is central to the adult training strategy. Area manpower boards have an important role to play in giving strategic advice to the Manpower Services Commission on adult training needs in their area, and their members can individually and collectively play a valuable part in the national adult training campaign which was launched last month with the aim of raising awareness about the importance of adult training.

Trainees (Placings)

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Employment what are the placing results for trainees aged 19 years and over for the last four years using their training opportunities programme skills three months after course completion as a proportion from (a) colleges of further education, (b) skillcentres and (c) all institutions.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The information requested is as follows:

	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84
Colleges of further education	46	42	48*	53*
Skillcentres	36	29	35	46
All institutions	43	37	42	50

* Separate placing figures for colleges of further education are not available for 1982-83 and 1983-84. Figures quoted for these years are for all institutions except skillcentres.

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for employment what are the placing results for the last four years for trainees aged 19 years and over as a proportion in employment three months after course completion from (a) colleges of further education, (b) skillcentres and (c) all institutions.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The information requested is as follows:

	Colleges of further education	Skillcentres	All institutions
1980-81	55	47	53
1981-82	50	41	47
1982-83	*58	46	52
1983-84	*62	57	60

* Separate placing figures for colleges of further education are not available for 1982-83 and 1983-84. Figures quoted for these years are for all institutions except skillcentres.

Collaborative Projects

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many local collaborative projects have now been approved in each Manpower Services Commission region; and what is the average funding per project and the total sum now committed.

Mr. Peter Morrison: By the end of November 78 small-scale local collaborative project contracts had been signed and 13 large-scale projects had been approved (subject to conditions in a few cases). The position in each Manpower Services Commission region was as follows:

	Small-scale	Large-scale
Scotland	—	1
Northern	6	2
Yorkshire and Humberside	10	1
North West	9	—
Midlands	17	2
Wales	6	1
South West	8	—
South East	19	4
London	3	2
	78	13

The average funding for a small-scale project is £11,499 and £45,507 for a large-scale project. The total sum now committed to small-scale projects is £896,897 and large-scale projects approved so far require funding of £591,590.

Food and Drink Industries

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the number of job losses in the food and drink industries since 1 May.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information about job gains and job losses is not available from the Department's statistics, but an indication of net changes can be seen by comparing levels of employees in employment at different dates.

Between May and October, in Great Britain, the estimated number of employees in employment in the food and drink manufacturing industries (activity headings 4115-4283 of the 1980 Standard Industrial Classification) increased by 17,200. The estimate for October, the latest available, is provisional.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of the labour force has been unemployed in the county of Derbyshire for over three years, two years and one year, respectively.

Mr. Alan Clark: Following is the latest available information in respect of unemployed claimants on 11 October 1984.

Rates of long-term unemployment—Derbyshire

Duration of unemployment	*Per cent. of all workers
Over three years	1·9
Over two years	3·5
Over one year	6·5

* The figures are expressed as a percentage of employees in employment, plus the unemployed. Since ward-based unemployment figures by duration corresponding exactly to county boundaries will not be available until mid 1985, the figures relate to the best fit of the travel-to-work areas and the base figures relate to 1978, rather than 1983 as for the new travel-to-work areas.

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many unemployed (a) adults and (b) young people aged between 16 and 21 years were available for every job vacancy registered in the county of Derbyshire at the latest available date.

Mr. Alan Clark: On 11 October 1984, the latest date for which an analysis of unemployment by age is available, there was a total of 9,307 unemployed claimants aged between 16 and 19 years, and a total of 39,826 unemployed claimants aged 20 years and over in Derbyshire. On 5 October 1984 there were 76 vacancies unfilled at careers offices in Derbyshire and 1,690 unfilled vacancies at jobcentres. These figures cannot be added together because some vacancies are notified to both careers offices and jobcentres.

Ratios of unemployed persons to unfilled vacancies cannot be calculated in the form requested because vacancies at jobcentres are normally open to persons of all age groups.

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many people between the ages of 16 and 21 years were unemployed in the county of Derbyshire at the nearest available date; and what was the comparable figure at the end of 1983.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information on unemployment in the 16 to 19 and 20 to 24 years age groups for the county of Derbyshire is available in the House of Commons' Library.

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Employment what was the total number of redundancies in the county of Derbyshire in 1983 and to the nearest available date in 1984.

Mr. Alan Clark: In 1983 a total of 6,494 redundancies were confirmed as due to occur in the county of Derbyshire. During the first 10 months of 1984, the figure was 6,716 (provisional).

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many jobs were lost in the following industries in the county of Derbyshire in 1983 and to the nearest available date in 1984: (a) metal manufacturing, (b) textiles and clothing, (c) food and drink, (d) engineering, (e) vehicle manufacturing, (f) construction and (g) furniture.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information is not available. Information on job losses is not collected. Net changes in employment in groups of industries can be supplied, but, for areas smaller than regions, only for those dates when censuses of employment are conducted. Censuses of employment have been taken triennially since 1978 and the latest results are for September 1981.

Mr. Skinner asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) what is the current level of unemployment in the county of Derbyshire compared to the national level;

(2) what is the level of female unemployment in the county of Derbyshire at the latest available date.

Mr. Alan Clark: The information requested is available in the House of Commons Library.

Asbestos

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many asbestos removal jobs have been notified to each of the Health and Safety Executive's areas under requirements imposed on removal organisations by licences issued under the Asbestos (Licensing) Regulations 1983.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The number of asbestos removal jobs notified to each of the Health and Safety Executive's 21 area offices as a result of these requirements on 31 October 1984 was as follows:

		Number of jobs
Area 1:	South West	278
Area 2:	South	310
Area 3:	South East	290
Area 4:	London North West	309
Area 5:	London North East	239

Area 19:	North East	256
Area 20:	Scotland East	202
Area 21:	Scotland West	237
Total		4,974

Mr. Caborn asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many site visits have been made in each of the Health and Safety Executive's areas to asbestos removal operations which have as a requirement of licences issued under the Asbestos (Licensing) Regulations 1983 been notified to the Health and Safety Executive.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The number of site visits made in each of the Health and Safety Executive's 21 areas as a result of these requirements on 31 October 1984 was as follows:

		Number of site visits
Area 1:	South West	74
Area 2:	South	15
Area 3:	South East	25
Area 4:	London North West	110
Area 5:	London North East	44
Area 6:	London South	81
Area 7:	East Anglia	27
Area 8:	Northern Home Counties	69
Area 9:	East Midlands	63
Area 10:	West Midlands	92
Area 11:	Wales	32

Area 18:	North West	34
Area 19:	North East	71
Area 20:	Scotland East	146
Area 21:	Scotland West	53
Total		1,341

These figures may include more than one visit to any one site.

Mr. Wheeler asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the members of the Manpower Services Commission London north area manpower board; and which organisations they represent.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The membership of MSC London north area manpower board is as follows:

Wages and Labour Costs

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the ratio of net wage income to total labour costs in the last five years for which figures are available in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the United States and (c) the EEC as a whole.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: Comparable informtion on the ratio of net wage income to total labour costs is not available.

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Employment what has been the increase in (a) real wages and (b) real labour costs per employee in the last 10 years for which figures are available in (a) the United Kingdom, (b) the United States and (c) the EEC as a whole.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The latest information relates to manufacturing industry for the period 1971 to 1981 and is shown in the following table:

Average annual increase (percentage)	Great Britain	United States
(i) Average gross weekly earnings*	15·7	8·4
(ii) Total hourly labour costs (adults)‡	16·9	9·3
(iii) Consumer prices	†13·9	8·4

Information for the EEC as a whole is not available.

* Great Britain figure relates to all employees; the United States figure relates to production workers on private payrolls.

‖ (iv)=(i) relative to (iii);
(v)=(ii) relative to (iii).

Amble Special Training Centre

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Employment why the Amble special training centre, funded under the special programmes scheme, has been closed; what provision has been made to place the trainees in other centres; and what consultations were undertaken with local authorities before the decision was taken.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Amble community workshop run by Northumberland county council's special programmes agency has not closed. Discussions are taking place between the Manpower Services Commission and the county council about the balance of training to be offered at the workshop from April 1985 under the youth training scheme.

Books and Periodicals (VAT)

Mr. Coombs asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is his estimate of the effect on jobs of the imposition of value added tax on books, periodicals and newspapers.

Mr. Hayhoe: I have been asked to reply.

While the imposition of value added tax on books, periodicals and newspapers could lead to reductions in sales, taxation would be only one of a number of factors affecting employment and it would not be possible to determine its precise effect on the publishing and related industries.

CIVIL SERVICE

Trade Union Membership

Mr. Madel asked the Minister for the Civil Service whether he will ensure that no individual will be refused employment in the Civil Service and no civil servant will be sacked from the Civil Service because he is not a member of a trade union.

Mr. Hayhoe: Yes. Civil servants are recruited by fair and open competition on merit. The conditions of eligibility for all recruitment schemes for the Civil Service are determined solely by the requirements for performing the duties of the post or grade. Equally, no civil servant will be dismissed for non-membership of a trade union. These are well-established principles and they are fully in line with the Government's general employment policies and legislation.

THE ARTS

British Museum

Mr. Faulds asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts if he has anything to add to his answer of 12 December, Official Report, column 489, about representations on the entrance hall of the British museum.

Mr. Waldegrave: As I have told the House, my right hon. and noble Friend has received representations on this matter from the Georgian Group only. I understand, however, that the Victorian Society has made representations direct to the British museum.

PRIME MINISTER

Regional Development Grant

Q30. Dr. Marek asked the Prime Minister if she will estimate the implications for the level of unemployment in Wales of the recent changes in regional development grant.

Mr. Biffen: I have been asked to reply.

A new, more sharply focused and job-related regional development grant will considerably increase both the competitive ability of the assisted areas including Wales and the results of regional expenditure in terms of new employment created.

Treason

Q41. Mr. David Atkinson asked the Prime Minister if she has any proposals to seek to amend the law relating to treason.

Mr. Biffen: I have been asked to reply.

The Government has no such proposals at present.

Easter Fluchter

Q76. Mr. Hirst asked the Prime Minister if she will pay an official visit to Easter Fluchter.

Mr. Biffen: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend has at present no plans to do so.

Engagements

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Prime Minster if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 20 December.

Mr. Fisher asked the Prime Minster if she will list her official engagements for 20 December.

Mr. Parry asked the Prime Minster if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 20 December.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Prime Minster if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 20 December.

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Prime Minster if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 20 December.

Mr. Adley asked the Prime Minster if she will list her official engagements for 20 December.

Mr. Pike asked the Prime Minster if she will list her official engagements for Thursday 20 December.

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minster if she will list her official engagements for 20 December.

Mr. Duffy asked the Prime Minster if she will publish her official engagements for 20 December.

Mr. Biffen: I have been asked to reply.

I refer my hon. Friends, the hon. Gentlemen and the hon. Lady to the reply that I gave earlier today to my hon. Friend the Member for Rugby and Kenilworth (Mr. Pawsey).

Outer Space (Arms)

Mr. Freud asked the Prime Minster what assessment was made of United Nations resolution 38/70 about prevention of an arms race in outer space prior to the casting of the United Kingdom vote: what discussions were held with other countries, apart from the relevant deliberations of that United Nations session prior to the vote; and whether she will make a statment.

Mr. Luce: I have been asked to reply.

The United Kingdom regularly consults its allies and European Community partners on United Nations Resolutions, and did so in this case. In 1983 the United Kingdom abstained on this resolution, as was made clear at the time, not because of disagreement with many of its objectives but because it ignored or prejudged a number of important issues still under discussion in international fora. At this year's United Nations General Assembly the United Kingdom voted in favour of a draft resolution sponsored by non-aligned countries on the prevention of an arms race in outer space.

Mr. Gorbachev

Mr. Wareing asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on her recent talks with Mr. Mikhail Gorbachev, Secretary of the Central Committee of the Communist party of the Soviet Union.

Mr. Rifkind: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend gave a lunch followed by talks with Mr. Gorbachev on 16 December. The talks lasted some two and three quarter hours and were business-like and friendly. They dealt most with current issues in East-West relations and the prospects for arms control. There was also a brief discussion of bilateral relations and Anglo-Soviet trade.

Mr. Gorbachev brought the Prime Minister a message from President Chernenko. In thanking him for this, the Prime Minister recalled her useful and constructive talk with Mr. Chernenko last February.

There was agreement on the need for increased contacts between Britain and the Soviet Union as a step towards diminishing misunderstanding between East and West and creating the increased confidence necessary for successful negotiations on arms control. The Prime Minister impressed on Mr. Gorbachev the sincerity of the West's wish to achieve security at a lower level of armaments, with the essential conditions of balance and adequate verification.

Supplementary Benefit (Board and Lodging)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Prime Minister what response she is making to the representations sent to her from the Disabilities Study Unit concerning the Government's proposals to restrict the payment of supplementary benefit for board and lodging in the case of people living outside their home area; and if she will make a statement.

Mr. Fowler: I have been asked to reply.

Representations received from individuals and organisations by 28 December will be considered under the consultation exercise being conducted by the Social Security Advisory Committee.

Departmental Policy Reviews

Mr. Madden asked the Prime Minister how many policy reviews have been announced by Government Departments since June 1983, how many such reviews have been completed to date; how many management consultants have been retained by Government Departments since June 1983; and at what total cost to date.

Mr. Biffen [pursuant to his reply, 18 December 1984, c. 82]: Policy review is in many cases a continuing process. But since June 1983 we have announced some 130 separate reviews and completed about 50. These include some efficiency scrutinies and studies which have a significant impact on policy. In the same period, Departments have let about 70 different contracts to management consultants at a cost to date of some £2½ million.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Books and Periodicals (VAT)

Mr. Coombs asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the annual revenue from the imposition of value added tax at the standard rate on periodicals.

Mr. Hayhoe: It is estimated that the net additional full year revenue at 1984-85 prices would be about £65 million.

Personal Allowances and Taxation

Mr. Squire asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage increase in personal allowances would be possible if the whole of the £1·5 billion fiscal adjustment predicted in his autumn statement were used in this way; how many families with children would be lifted out of tax by such an increase; and what would be the impact on the numbers caught in the poverty trap.

Mr. Moore: A full answer would require a complete economic simulation. However, a reasonable approximation can be obtained from the direct revenue cost of the change in 1985-86. An increase of just under 10 per cent. on top of indexation in personal allowances (including age allowance) would have a direct revenue cost of about £1½ billion in 1985-86. This would give increases of £310 in the married man's allowance, and of £200 in the single person's and wife's earned income allowance, above the indexed values in table 4.1 of the autumn statement. Such increases would take about 850,000 people out of tax compared to indexation of allowances in 1985-86, including about 75,000 families with children. Of these, about 15,000 would be receiving family income supplement.

Money Supply

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the increase in the money supply, narrowly defined in both nominal and real terms, in the United States of America, the United Kingdom, Germany and Japan in the decades ending 1963, 1973 and 1983;

(2) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the increase in money supply, broadly defined in both nominal and real terms, in the United States of America, the United Kingdom, Germany and Japan in the decades ending 1963, 1973 and 1983.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how the velocity of circulation of money in the United Kingdom compares with that of other industrial countries; and whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the change in the velocity of circulation in each case since 1973.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Definitions of money differ between countries. Statistics on money, prices, national income and gross national product are available on a consistent basis in the "International Financial Statistics" year books for 1983 and 1984, published by the International Monetary Fund. These statistics are not always based on the preferred national definitions.

Board of Inland Revenue

Mr. Trotter asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many times each year the Board of Inland Revenue meets; and what was the date of the last meeting.

Mr. Moore: The Board of Inland Revenue meets on a regular basis to discuss matters of importance. It has had 12 meetings so far this year. The last meeting was held on 11 December.

Sterling Exchange Rate

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will give his estimate of the effect which the increase in the real sterling exchange rate since 1976 has had on the United Kingdom's balance of trade in manufactures.

Mr. Peter Rees: It is not possible to give a reliable estimate of this effect.

Coal Industry Dispute

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has happened to the cargo from the German Democratic Republic and Czechoslovakia consisting of food supplies intended for miners' families which was seized by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise.

Mr. Hayhoe: I assume that the question refers to cargo which arrived at Hull in October.

The foodstuffs detained by Customs on behalf of the Ministry of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food were re-exported some weeks ago, on behalf of the Medical Aid Committee for Vietnam.

Gilt-edged Securities

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the immediate saving to the Exchequer by way of interest if gilt-edged securities were to be converted into index-linked stocks of comparable maturities at current prices and yields.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It would be unrealistic to suppose that holders of conventional gilts would voluntarily exchange all their holdings for indexed gilts at current relative prices.

Pension Funds (Stocks)

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the value of (a) gilt-edged and (b) index-linked stocks held by pension funds.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Estimates of the nominal value of pension funds' holdings of gilt-edged stocks, including but not distinguishing indexed gilts, at March of each year are published in an appendix to the regular article on the national debt in the December edition of the Bank of England Quarterly Bulletin. Estimates of the market value of pension funds' holdings of conventional and indexed gilts as at end-December 1983 are published in "Financial Statistics", table 7.12.

Mr. Gould asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is his estimate of the nominal value of gilt-edged securities held by pension funds and the amount of interest payable thereon; and what is his estimate of the saving to the Exchequer in interest payments from the conversion of such securities into index-linked stocks at current prices and yields.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I refer the hon. Member to the replies I have given today to the hon. Member for Great Grimsby (Mr. Mitchell). Because no statistics are available for the coupons payable on gilts held by pension funds, it is not possible to give a reliable estimate of the interest payable on these holdings.

Economic Indices

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the average rate of growth of (a) gross national product, (b) manufacturing output, (c) productivity and (d) inflation for the following periods: (i) 1954 to 1964, (ii) 1964 to 1974, (iii) 1970 to 1974, (iv) 1974 to 1979 and (v) 1979 to 1984.

Mr. Peter Rees: Recent figures for gross national product, manufacturing output, prices and productivity are available in the November 1984 issue of Economic Trends and the 1984 edition of the "United Kingdom National Accounts". Earlier figures are published in the Economic Trends Annual Supplement, 1984 edition. Figures for the whole of 1984 will not be available until next year. Apart from the 1984 figures the only figure requested that is not readily available from these published sources is that for productivity growth between 1954 and 1964. No continuous estimates of productivity are available from official statistical publications due to changes in the coverage of the employed labour force series in 1959.

Protected Buildings

Mr. Latham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has yet completed his review of the 75 per cent. test for substantially reconstructed protected buildings; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Shersby asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he has yet completed his review of the 75 per cent. test for substantially reconstructed protected buildings; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: Yes. I am now satisfied that the "75 per cent. test" (one of two tests required for VAT zero rating of the sale or long lease of a substantially reconstructed protected building) is too severe to provide the broad equivalence with the old "50 per cent. test" which I promised in announcing the reliefs on 18 May, at columns 271-72. A Treasury order will be laid as soon as possible after the Christmas recess reducing the qualifying figure from 75 to 60 per cent. This change has been welcomed by the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission, to whose members and staff I should pay tribute for their help with the difficult task of reviewing the matter. Finally, I should add that since the order cannot have retrospective effect, I have authorised Customs and Excise to operate extra-statutorily as if 60 per cent., and not 75 per cent. had been the qualifying percentage between 1 June 1984 and the operative date of the order.

Television Licence Fee

Mr. Tracey asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the effect on the retail price index of an increase in the British Broadcasting Corporation colour television licence fee to £65.

Mr. Peter Rees: An increase in the colour licence fee to £65 would increase the level of the RPI by 0·16 per cent.

Mortgage Valuation Fees (VAT)

Sir John Page asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the practice of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in relation to the levying of value added tax on mortgage valuation fees charged by (a) chartered surveyors and (b) building society staff surveyors.

Mr. Hayhoe: Supplies of surveying services by VAT registered chartered surveyors are liable to VAT at the standard rate of 15 per cent. Mortgage valuation fees charged to building societies by independent chartered surveyors are therefore subject to the tax. Where it is the practice of a building society to use its own staff to survey properties there is no supply of services for VAT purposes and no tax is chargeable.

Taxation

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if, for each decile group in the income distribution, he will publish information showing the amount of taxes paid as a proportion of gross income broken down between (i) direct taxes, (ii) indirect taxes and (iii) all taxes for the most recent year or tax year available; and whether he will also show the average level of gross income in each of the income groups specified;

(2) whether he will publish the latest estimates of the real change in taxes, rates and national insurance in 1984-85 compared with 1978-79 broken down (a) into the following categories: (i) income tax, (ii) corporation tax, (iii) North Sea taxes, (iv) capital taxes and stamp duty, (v) national insurance contributions, employees, (vi) national insurance contributions, employers, (vii) national insurance surcharge, (viii) local authority rates and (ix) taxes on expenditure; and (b) to show the division of changes in income tax between (i) taxes on investment income and (ii) taxes on those in the lower and upper deciles and in the four quartiles of tax units ranked by income.

Mr. Peter Rees: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Gross Domestic Product

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the gross domestic product was represented by taxation, including national insurance contributions and local authority rates in 1984; and whether he will provide a breakdown of the percentage figure between taxes on income, taxes on expenditure, national insurance, capital taxes, stamp duty and rates in 1984 and for each year from 1979 onwards.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Occupational Pension Schemes

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a list of all the occupational pension schemes in the public sector, both local and central Government employees, whose members are required to take all or part of their pension in a lump sum on retirement.

Mr. Hayhoe: Fixed lump sums form part of the occupational pension scheme benefits for the Civil Service, local government, teaching, NHS and the armed forces. Such an arrangement also applies in a number of occupational schemes covering the staff of fringe bodies.

Pensions (Taxation)

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the revenue in 1985-86 from taxing that part of the lump sum taken on retirement in 1985-86 accruing to members of pension schemes from contributions after April 1985.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Income Tax

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish information for 1984 showing for each European Economic Community country as well as the Organisation for Economic Co-operation and Development countries (a) the level of gross income in pounds sterling at which a single person becomes liable for income tax, (b) the starting rate of income tax, (c) the combined starting rate of income tax and any social security contributions and (d) separate figures on typical rates of local taxes, where appropriate, together with information showing the level of income in pounds sterling at which (i) a single person, (ii) a married couple and (iii) a married couple with two children become liable to income tax at 30 per cent. on earned income in each country.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

World Bank

Mr. Terry Davis asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how often he and any other Ministers in his Department have met the executive director of the World Bank appointed by the United Kingdom to discuss the policies or reports of the World Bank.

Mr. Ian Stewart: My right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer meets with the United Kingdom executive director from time to time. In addition, there are frequent contacts between Treasury officials and the United Kingdom delegation in Washington on World Bank issues of concern to the Treasury.

Landlord's Fixtures

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he is in a position to issue draft legislation on capital allowances for expenditure on landlord's fixtures.

Mr. Moore: With my approval, the Inland Revenue will be publishing draft legislation on this subject next Thursday 27 December.

Capital Gains Tax

Mr. Forman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any plans to introduce legislation to amend the capital gains tax rules which apply to assets disposed of in a series of transactions; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Moore: Yes. The Board of Inland Revenue has been advised that the relevant legislation (section 151 of the Capital Gains Tax Act 1979) applies only to those transactions which occur within the two-year period preceding the latest transaction in the series. More generally, I am aware of the unsatisfactory nature of the present law and I am examining ways in which this can be resolved.

Nationalised Industries

Mr. Merchant asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he is considering any changes in nationalised industry legislation.

Mr. Peter Rees: The Government intend to legislate in due course to update various aspects of nationalised industry statutes. On behalf of the various Departments which sponsor nationalised industries, I have today sent a consultation note to the Nationalised Industries' Chairmen's Group setting out various proposals. I have aranged for a copy of this note to be placed in the Library of the House.

Kedleston Hall

Mr. Cormack asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what progress has been made in the negotiation over the acceptance of Kedleston hall, its parklands and some of its principal contents by the nation in lieu of tax liabilities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macfarlane: I have been asked to reply.

My right hon. Friend and I visited Kedleston in May of this year and assured Lord Scarsdale that the Government shared his hopes that a solution could be found which secured the future of Kedleston hall and its contents for the nation, retained its historic link with the Curzon family and satisfied the outstanding tax liability on the estate. The National Heritage Memorial Fund was subsequently asked to prepare a report on the costs of several different methods of achieving these objectives. I understand that following receipt of certain financial information from a number of parties, including the trustees of the Kedleston estate that report should be available by the end of this month. Thereafter negotiations will proceed at a pace dictated by the co-operation of the several parties involved the availability of resources and the need to obtain the court's approval to any scheme that emerges.

EC (Expenditure)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what will be the limit on the sum of total expenditure which the Common Market Council of Ministers will, by qualified majority, be able to determine when the additional own resources and budgetary restraint mechanism come into effect.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 18 December 1984, c. 121]: At the beginning of the budgetary procedure each year the Council will fix a "reference framework" as part of the arrangemets on budgetary discipline. This framework will be fixed by qualified majority, but it will constitute the total sum to be made available for the component parts of Community expenditure, which are themselves subject to budgetary discipline in the following manner. Article 1 of the Council conclusions on budgetary discipline provides that the Council will fix this amount in accordance with the financial guidelines governing expenditure on agricultural market support and with the maximum rate limit on non-obligatory expenditure. The guideline for agricultural expenditure states that its rate of increase must be less than the rate of growth of the own resources base. Articles 3, 4 and 5 of the budgetary discipline conclusions lay down the method for calculating the guideline each year. The rule for calculating the maximum rate for non-obligatory expenditure is laid down in article 203(9) of the European Community treaty. Provision will also be made within the reference framework for obligatory expenditue other than that on agricultural market support.

Royal Mint

Mr. Merchant asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the estimated value of the Royal Mint as a trading concern.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 19 December 1984, c. 189]: At the 31 March 1984 the audited historic cost accounts show a net asset value of £32·059 million; the audited current cost accounts show a net asset value of £40·087 million. Precise valuation of the Royal Mint as a trading concern would require complex and costly analysis.

I would also refer my hon. Friend to the detailed figures contained in the 1984 annual report of the Royal Mint and the Royal Mint trading fund accounts published as a White Paper (HC 48) on 17 July 1984.

SCOTLAND

Woodlands

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to ensure the safety of coppice woodland from clearance for agriculture or replacement with conifers.

Mr. John MacKay: The felling of coppice of more than 15 centimetres (6in) in diameter requires a licence from the Forestry Commission. Such licences usually require that the land on which the felling takes place is to be managed in accordance with the rules and practice of good forestry in such a way as to secure its restocking by coppice regrowth.

Mr. Kenneth Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will take steps to ensure that ancient semi-natural woodlands in Britain are not damaged or destroyed by the exploitation of the provision in the felling licensing regulations by which 30 cubic metres of timber may be felled per quarter without a felling licence.

Mr. John MacKay: This is a matter which is being considered in the context of the Forestry Commission's review of the policy for broadleaved woodlands, following the publication of the consultative paper "Broadleaves in Britain" earlier this year.

Natural Library (Board Membership)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what consideration he has given to including an hon. Member for a Scottish constituency on the board of the National Library.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I have given full consideration to the provision in clause 17 of the National Heritage (Scotland) Bill and remain satisfied with the continued inclusion among the trustees of the National Library of Scotland of my hon. Friend the Member for Edinburgh, Central (Mr. Fletcher) ex officio.

Prisoners (Pay)

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when the rate of pay for work done by prisoners was last reviewed; what plans he has for an uprating; and whether the current rates of pay take account of cost increases in the range of goods available for purchase by prisoners.

Mr. Younger: The rate of pay is reviewed annually, the most recent increase having been made in October. Adjustments now take account of the average increase in public sector pay rather than price movements in the range of goods available for purchase by prisoners.

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what rates are paid to prisoners for work in prison at present; and what were the comparable figures five and 10 years ago.

Mr. Younger: The rates vary according to the type of work performed by an inmate, whether an adult or a young offender. Currently they range from a minimum flat rate of 90p per week to a maximum of £3·40 per week for piece work. Comparable figures for five years ago are 70p minimum and £2·20 maximum; and for 10 years ago 25p minimum, 96p maximum.

Edinburgh Bypass

Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the expected timetable for the starts and completions of the east and west sections of the dual carriageway bypass south of Edinburgh; and whether on completion this route will be given trunk road classification.

Mr. Younger: The timetable for the construction of the Edinburgh city bypass is the responsibility of Lothian regional council. Work on the Sighthill section is under way and I understand that completion is expected in the latter half of 1987. According to the latest information available to my Department the time table for the remaining sections is as follows:

Section	Start	Completion
Burdiehouse	mid-1986	early-1989
Gilmerton	late-1987	late-1989
Millerhill	late-1986	late-1988

Progress of works will depend upon planning and land acquisition procedures, and the availability of resources.

I have at present no proposals to trunk the completed bypass.

A7 (Edinburgh-Carlisle)

Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what further plans he has for improvements in the A7 trunk route between Edinburgh and Carlisle, following the scheme at Canonbie.

Mr. Younger: Bypasses of Dalkeith, Middleton and Langholm and a realignment of the Synton-Mossend section, each costing over £1 million, are planned. The following minor schemes (under £1 million) are also envisaged.

Region and Scheme

Dumfries and Galloway
- Improvement north of Eweslees
- Improvement at Eskdalemuir Junction

Borders
- Falahill-Heriot Diversion
- Newton Farm Diversion
- Sandbed, Hawick
- Newmill Village
- Parkdaill
- South of Gilston Road

In all cases, construction will depend on the satisfactory completion of detailed investigation, design and statutory procedures and on the availability of finance.

Defective Housing

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what allocation is being made to local authorities in respect of defective housing including Orlit housing and Blackburn Orlit housing.

Mr. Ancram: No specific provisional allocation has been made for 1985-86 in respect of defective houses in local authority ownership. However, in reaching decisions on individual authorities' provisional capital allocations on the HRA block, the fullest consideration has been given to their statements of need in this regard, as contained in the forward capital programmes which authorities have submitted. The increase of £43 million in next year's capital allocations on this block should allow scope for authorities to undertake realistically phased programmes of remedial work according to the priority they attach to this particular aspect of housing need.

The provisional allocations announced this week are not intended to cover authorities' financial liabilities under the Housing Defects Act 1984. The intention is to consult authorities during the course of 1985-86 with a view to issuing appropriate supplementary allocations.

Highlands and Islands Airports

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the rate revenue from the Civil Aviation Authority in respect of each of the Highlands and Islands airports for the years 1983-84 and 1984-85; and what is the estimated revenue for these airports in 1985-86.

Mr. Ancram: The rates paid by the Civil Aviation Authority in respect of each aerodrome in 1983-84 and 1984-85 were as set out in the table:

	1983-84	1984-85
Benbecula	144	166
Inverness	184	198
Islay	32	24
Kirkwall	60	76
Stornoway	125	132
Tiree	21	22
Wick	59	62
Sumburgh	520	672

It is not possible to estimate the rates payable in 1985-86 because of the impending general rates revaluation.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will make it his policy to provide a subsidy for the running costs of any aerodromes in the Highlands and Islands which may be taken over by local authorities;

(2) what plans he has to alter the expenditure limits imposed on local authorities which may take over the running of aerodromes in the Highlands and Islands;

(3) how many local authorities have shown an interest in the acquisition of the Highlands and Islands airports.

Mr. Ancram: Local authorities, and other potential purchasers, have until 31 December to make any offers for the airports. The Government have made it clear that subsidy will continue to be available where necessary to ensure a level of service adequate to meet the essential needs of the local communities. Any additional expenditure incurred by local authorities would be taken into account in calculating local authority relevant expenditure.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is his policy regarding the price for which he would accept an offer or tender for any of the Highlands and Islands airports.

Mr. Ancram: Offers or tenders will be considered on their merits against the objectives of retaining the airport facilities and securing their provision in the most efficient and cost effective manner.

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make it a condition of sale of airports in the Highlands and Islands that any potential purchaser would have to maintain an adequate and satisfactory service.

Mr. Ancram: The aerodromes will be sold subject to conditions designed to ensure that the essential needs of the communities served are met.

Revaluation

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what representations he has received from local authorities and other bodies over the 1985 revaluation.

Mr. Ancram: The likely effects of the 1985 revaluation have been discussed at ministerial and official meetings with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities. In the light of these discussions and of estimates provided by assessors of the likely effect of the changes on different classes of property, my right hon. Friend decided earlier this month to increase fivefold the domestic rate relief element in the rate support grant, to give local authorities an additional £19 million in grant for 1985-86, and to reduce the level of industrial derating from 1985-86 onwards from 50 per cent. to 40 per cent. Questions about the valuation and rating of individual properties are not for my right hon. Friend but the general public and hon. Members continue to demonstrate in correspondence with him a significant level of interest in the various aspects of the revaluation.

Building Standards

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland which of the organisations invited to submit comments following the issue of his consultation document on "Part Q (Housing Standards)" of the Building Standards (Scotland) Regulations have indicated their support or opposition to the proposed changes.

Mr. Ancram: I refer the hon. Member to the reply which I gave to the hon. Member for Fife, Central (Mr. Hamilton) on 5 December at columns 211-212.

Rate Fund Contribution

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will indicate in respect of each district council in Scotland the assumptions as to future rent levels upon which the rate fund contribution limitation was calculated; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ancram: My right hon. Friend estimates that his proposal to set an aggregate limit of £89·5 million on the amount which authorities may estimate to carry from their general rate fund to the credit of their housing revenue account in 1985-86 would imply an average increase of £1·02 per week on the current Scottish average council house rent of approximately £10·45. This calculation is based on the assumption that forecast expenditure on management and maintenance will increase by no more than 5 per cent. next year and that local authorities' estimated loan charges will total £399·5 million.

The rent increases imposed by individual authorities are likely to vary considerably about this average. My right hon. Friend has not made detailed assumptions about future rent levels in individual authorities. These will depend on authorities' own decisions, not least on the level of provision they intend to make for management and maintenance and the extent to which they have in the past budgeted within housing expenditure limits.

Museums and Galleries

Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what increases he proposes to the provision made for the Royal Scottish Museum, the National Museum of Antiquities of Scotland, the National Galleries of Scotland, and the National Library of Scotland and to the grants made to the Scottish Museums Council and the Scottish Film Council in 1985-86.

Mr. Younger: Subject to parliamentary approval I propose to increase the net provision, excluding purchase grants, for the National Museums (the Royal Scottish Museum and the National Museum of Antiquities of Scotland) by £331,000 in 1985-86 (12 per cent.) over the 1984-85 provision; and I propose to allocate an additional £700,000 in 1985-86 through the Property Services Agency, most of which will be used to maintain the fabric of the museum facilities.

I propose to increase the net provision of the National Galleries of Scotland by £99,000 (6 per cent., discounting special extra provision of £30,000 for a new telephone exchange authorised in 1984-85) and the National Library of Scotland by £236,000 (9 per cent.). In the case of both institutions, these increases take account of the fact that new accommodation to house their collections and facilities has either just been provided or is being prepared. The additional provision will enable the galleries to make better use of this accommodation, and will allow the National Library to begin to take on the specialist staff required for the opening in 1987 of the Scottish science reference library.

I also intend to increase purchase grants for the national institutions and the local museum purchase funds by £345,000 (13 per cent.) overall. The total increases in net provision for 1985-86 will therefore amount to 12 per cent. for the National Museums, 9 per cent. for the National Galleries of Scotland and 10 per cent. for the National Library of Scotland.

I am proposing to increase the Scottish Museum Council's grant, including grant to the Museum Documentation Association, by £117,000 (41 per cent.) and the Scottish Film Council's grant by £74,000 (22 per cent.) The provision for the Scottish Film Council includes an additional £10,000 in the grant which is paid through the Council towards the Scottish film production fund.

Local Authorities (Ministerial Default Powers)

Mr. Dewar asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will set out in detail the range of default powers open to him and other Ministers in dealing with local authorities in Scotland in the same form as used by his right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment in his reply to the right hon. Member for Manchester, Wythenshawe (Mr. Morris) on 11 April 1984, Official Report, column 249.

If the duty is not then discharged by the specified date the Secretary of State may make arrangements for the discharge of the duty, recovering the expenses incurred from the person or persons in default of the duty; or, on the application of the Lord Advocate the Court of Session may order specific performance of the duty.

Fire Services Act 1947, section 36

The Secretary of State has the power to make a new administration scheme for a combined area if the constituent authorities' scheme is unsatisfactory.

CIVIL DEFENCE

Civil Defence Act 1948, section 2(2)(c) (as applied by Civil Defence (General) (Scotland) Regulations 1949, Regulation 5)

The Secretary of State, where he is satisfied that a local authority has failed or has refused properly to discharge any of the civil defence functions conferred on it, may either empower himself to discharge those functions or authorise or require some other authority or person to do so (in either case in the name and at the expense of the defaulting authority).

The Civil Defence (Grant) (Scotland) Regulations 1953, Regulation 6

The Secretary of State may withhold, in whole or in part, permanently or for such time as he may determine, payment of civil defence grant if a local authority has, among other things, failed to perform its civil defence functions efficiently or failed to comply with any directions issued by him with which the authority is bound to comply under the Civil Defence Act 1948.

MISCELLANEOUS

Registration of Births, Deaths and Marriages (Scotland) Act 1965, section 7(8)

Where a local registration authority (a Regional or Islands Council) has failed to fill a vacancy in the office of district registrar after being required to do so by the Registrar General, the vacancy is to be filled by the Secretary of State on the application of the Registrar General.

Countryside (Scotland) Act 1967, section 55

The Secretary of State may make byelaws in default of the local authority's complying with a direction to do so themselves within 3 months.

District Courts (Scotland) Act 1975, section 5(4)

The Secretary of State may, where it appears to him expedient to do so in order to avoid delays in the administration of justice in any district court, direct the local authority concerned to appoint a qualified person to act as a stipendiary magistrate in that court.

Licensing (Scotland) Act 1967, section 1(11)

If a Licensing Board is not elected at the time at which it ought to be elected, or an insufficient number of members is elected for a board the Secretary of State may by order provide for the holding of another election or elections for supplying such fault or deficiency in election at such times and in such manner as he may think expedient.

Representation of the People Act 1983, section 18(5)

The Secretary of State may direct returning officers to alter polling arrangements when the returning officer fails to provide polling arrangements to meet the reasonable requirements of electors, and may make the alterations himself if the returning officer fails to make them within a month of the directive having been given.

Police Operation, Blindwells, East Lothian

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will call for a report from the chief constable of the Lothian and Borders police on the number of police officers and vehicles which were deployed at Blindwells, East Lothian, on the morning of 10 December; what was the cost of this police operation; and what was the purpose of the blocking of traffic on the Tranent/Meadowmill road on that occasion.

Mr. Ancram [pursuant to his reply, 14 December 1984, c. 620]: I understand from the chief constable that up to a maximum of 174 officers and 16 vehicles were deployed at the scene where some 500 persons had gathered; that it is not possible for him to provide a separate cost for this particular policing operation; and that it was necessary to close the road to traffic for a period to prevent obstruction to the entrance to the Blindwells site and to permit the police to exercise operational control at the scene.

Selective Financial Assistance

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much he has paid out in selective financial assistance to companies in the Dunfermline and Kirkcaldy travel-to-work areas from 1979 onwards; and how many companies have received help.

Mr. Allan Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 17 December 1984, c. 57]: In the period from January 1979 to October 1984 inclusive payments of selective financial assistance totalling £7·43 million were made to 76 companies in the Dunfermline and Kirkcaldy travel-to-work areas.

Police (Pay)

Mr. Willie Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what are the current rates of basic pay for each rank in the police force; what additional emoluments are payable; and what were the comparable figures in each of the last five years expressed in cash terms and in annual percentage increases.

Mr. Ancram [pursuant to his reply, 19 December 1984, c. 253]: The information is set out in the tables, the details about additional emoluments comprising the readily-available information in relation to 1 September 1979 and 1 December 1984 only.

Written Answers to Questions

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Research Assistants

Mr. Shersby asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will take steps to make it a requirement for research assistants and other staff employed by hon. Members serving on Select Committees to make an appropriate declaration of their intention to observe the confidentiality of any parliamentary papers which they may see in the course of their work.

Mr. Biffen: The Services Committee will shortly be considering a Sub-Committee report on a subject closely connected to that raised by my hon. Friend. If the Committee then makes a report to the House, an opportunity will no doubt arise for the discussion of my hon. Friend's proposal.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Field Walls

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what is the cost per metre of constructing a field wall using traditional materials; what would be the cost of constructing such a wall around a 10 hectare field; and what would be the net cost after payment of capital grant by his Department.

Mrs. Fenner: The cost of building a wall using traditional materials would vary greatly depending on a number of factors, which include the availability of materials, whether farm or contract labour is used and the nature of the site on which the work is to be carried out. For this reason it is not practical to provide the information sought. But the level of grant payable on eligible work of this kind would be 60 per cent. of the eligible cost in the less favoured areas and 30 per cent. in the lowlands.

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food how many grant claims have been received by his Department in respect of the provision of field walls of traditional materials, and hedges, respectively; and what length walls and hedges have been provided under grant-aided schemes in each of the last five years.

Mrs. Fenner: I regret the information requested is not available.

EC (Self-sufficiency)

Sir Peter Mills asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what was the degree of self-sufficiency in each of the major farm products in each of the 10 European Economic Community countries during the past five years.

Mr. MacGregor: The information requested is given in the following table for 1980 and the latest year for which estimates are available.

Agricultural Land (Drainage)

Mr. Home Robertson asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will estimate the area of agricultural land where the existing drainage system is more than 50 years old and more than 100 years old, respectively.

Mrs. Fenner: We do not collect information on the area of agricultural land which is drained, and so I regret that I cannot provide the estimate requested. I understand, however, it has been estimated that by 1880 between 4·85 and 5·7 million hectares had been drained and that, by 1939, 2·17 million hectares were still being effectively drained by old drainage systems.

Eggs

Mr. Hunter asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) what information he has as to the cost of egg production in France and the Netherlands at a convenient date each month since December 1983;

(2) if he will list the cost of egg production according to the production cost index at a convenient date each month since December 1983.

Mr. MacGregor: Monthly data on costs of egg production in member states is not available. But a comparison of production costs in a number of member states (including England and Wales, France and the Netherlands) was published in the report of the Agriculture Committee's inquiry into the effect of feedingstuff prices on the United Kingdom pig and poultry industries (pages 203-204 of Volume II of the Second Report 1983-84 Session). Following is an extract from the relevant table.

	£ per 100 eggs
England and Wales (1982)	3·65
Denmark (1982-83)	3·43
France (1982)	3·17
Germany (1982)	4·37
Netherlands (1982-83)	3·54
Ireland (1982)	4·96

For the reasons explained in the report, considerable care has to be taken in drawing any conclusions from these comparative production costs.

Mr. Hunter asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the price of eggs per dozen according to the egg price index on a convenient date each month since December 1983.

Mr. MacGregor: The price of size 4 eggs, as shown by the retail food index, since December 1983 is as follows:

Date (1984)	Pence per dozen
10 January	81·6
14 February	82·4
13 March	83·7
10 April	87·6
15 May	88·5

17 July	82·1
14 August	81·3
11 September	79·5
16 October	79·6
13 November	77·9

Mr. Hunter asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the total number of chicks placed for egg laying in the United Kingdom each month since December 1983.

Mr. MacGregor: The information requested is as follows:

Statistical month (4 or 5 weeks)	Millions of chicks
1984
January (5 weeks)	3·51
February	2·82
March	2·55
April (5 weeks)	3·63

July (5 weeks)	2·88
August	2·12

October (5 weeks)	3·09

Mr. Hunter asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food (1) if he will list the total of egg imports from France each month since December 1983;

(2) if he will list the total of egg imports from the Netherlands each month since December 1983;

(3) if he will list the totals of egg imports into the United Kingdom each month since December 1983.

Mr. MacGregor: The information requested is set out in the following table.

Imports of eggs in shell

January	26,094	29,486	66,383

Mr. Hunter asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what representations he has received alleging that French and Dutch eggs are being exported to the United Kingdom at less than the cost of production, packaging and transportation.

Mr. MacGregor: Earlier in the year I received some complaints about the prices of eggs imported from other member states. There is a free market for eggs within the European Community so that prices, at any point in time, depend on the balance between supply and demand and not on production costs. There was no evidence that imported eggs were on sale here at prices below those in the country of origin.

Mr. Hunter asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the powers available to him to control the importing of French and Dutch eggs into the United Kingdom.

Mr. MacGregor: There is a free market for eggs within the European Community. But the Importation of Animal Products and Poultry Products Order 1980 (S.I. 1980, No. 14), as amended, provides powers to control the landing of eating eggs in order to protect animal health. Further, imported eggs are subject to the Imported Food Regulations, which contain measures for the protection of public health, and to the EC Egg Marketing Standards Regulations.

Stevioside

Mr. Neale asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food in what food or drink products the use of stevioside is currently permitted.

Mrs. Fenner: None.

WALES

House Building Statistics

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many houses were completed in (a) the private sector and (b) the public sector in Wales in each year since 1978; and what is the estimate for 1985.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The number of dwellings completed in the public and private sectors in the years 1978 to 1984 are as follows. No estimate is available for 1985.

Number of completed dwellings

Appointments

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list in the Official Report the names, occupations and political affiliations where known of those people he has appointed to all the statutory bodies and the principal committees answerable to and appointed by him, giving salaries and payments where relevant.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Details of the numbers of people appointed solely by me to executive bodies, advisory bodies and health authorities in Wales and to the Board of the Welsh water authority are included in "Public Bodies 1984" published by HMSO on 18 December 1984. The publication includes details of remuneration where appropriate.

I will write to the hon. Gentleman with details of the names of those appointed and will place a copy of my letter in the Library. Information about appointees occupations could only be provided at disproportionate cost. My Department does not keep a record of appointees political affiliations. In making appointments it is my policy to select the best person for the job bearing in mind all factors relevant to the post.

Mr. Gareth Wardell asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will list the names of individuals that he has appointed to public bodies in Wales during the past year, together with individuals appointed to public bodies in Wales which he has (a) made jointly with other Ministers and (b) has been consulted about.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: I shall write to the hon. Gentleman and will place a copy of my letter in the Library.

Home Improvement Grants

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales how many applications for (a) discretionary and (b) mandatory home improvement grants are still awaiting payment or processing for each of the relevant Welsh local authorities.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: The number of (a) discretionary and (b) mandatory grant applications still awaiting approval are shown in the table. The number of grants applications which have received approval but still await payment is not available by local authority.

Housing Benefit Recipients

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Wales what percentage of all those in receipt of standard housing benefit in Wales with an income (a) above the needs allowance and (b) below the needs of allowance, have children; and, in each case, what percentage of those below pensionable age have children.

Mr. Whitney: I have been asked to reply.

I regret that this information is not available.

ENERGY

Oil

Mr. Skeet asked the Secretary of State for Energy on how many occasions in the past five years the spot price for crude oil has exceeded the term price.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: The spot price of United Kingdom continental shelf crude oil has exceeded the term price over 11 periods in the past five years for a total duration of approximately 98 weeks.

Plutonium (Military Use)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Energy (1) if Her Majesty's Government remain satisfied that it is the policy of the United States Government not to use plutonium supplied by the United Kingdom for military purposes other than in weapons;

(2) what is the latest information he has received about the reports to Congress by the United States Energy Secretary concerning the purposes to which plutonium supplied by the United Kingdom may be put in the United States.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have nothing to add to the answer I gave the right hon. Member on 2 July 1984 at column 36.

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Energy what further representations he has received from the general secretary of the Electrical Power Engineers Association about the purposes to which plutonium exported by the United Kingdom is put in the United States; and what reply he is sending.

Mr. Peter Walker: I have arranged for Mr. Lyons' latest letter and my reply to be placed in the Library.

Atomic Energy Authority Constabulary

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will list for each year since 1979 (a) the number and rank of people employed by and (b) the total expenditure of the Atomic Energy Authority constabulary.

Mr. Goodlad: The information is as follows:

(a) The strength of the Atomic Energy Authority Constabulary from 1979 to 1984 broken down by grades is as follows:

Rank	1979	1980	1981	1982	1983	1984
Deputy Chief Constable	1	1	1	1	1	1
Assistant Chief Constable	—	—	—	—	1	1
Superintendent	1	2	2	3	1	2
Chief Inspector	8	8	8	9	10	10

Constable	413	480	480	491	509	517
Total	516	589	591	613	635	646

(b) The total expenditure on the Atomic Energy Authority constabulary since 1979 is as follows:

	£ million
1979-80	4·4
1980-81	6·2
1981-82	6·9
1982-83	7·7
1983-84	8·8

Chapelcross Nuclear Power Station

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement on the future of the Chapelcross nuclear power station.

Mr. Goodlad: I am advised by British Nuclear Fuels plc that it expects that whilst the nuclear power station at Chapelcross continues to be an economic and reliable supplier of electricity, and its continued operation is approved by the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate, its operational life could be extended into the next decade.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

University Degree Courses

Mr. Fairbairn asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) what is the average cost to public funds of a university degree course in Scotland;

(2) what is the average cost to public funds of a university PhD course in Scotland;

(3) what is the average cost to public funds of a university degree course;

(4) what is the average cost to public funds of a university PhD course.

Mr. Brooke: It is not possible to identify separately the costs of courses for undergraduates and postgraduates, nor to identify a precise share of the cost met from public funds. Approximate average annual institutional expenditure per student in the academic year 1982-83, the latest year for which firm figures are available, was as follows:

Universities	£
England and Wales	4,670
Scotland	4,580
Great Britain	4,660

These figures include expenditure on research from general income, but exclude capital expenditure and expenditure on pensions payable from general income. About 95 per cent. of the expenditure for home students underlying the unit costs comes from public funds. In the academic year 1983-84, 70 per cent. of all full-time home undergraduates in Scotland were on courses of 4 years or more, compared with 28 per cent. in England and Wales. The average length of undergraduate courses in England and Wales is 3·4 years and in Scotland is 3·8 years.

Mr. Fairbairn asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how many students obtained degrees in politics, philosophy and economics at universities in 1983; and what proportion this represented of the total university student population;

(2) how many students obtained degrees in politics, philosophy and economics at Scottish universities in 1983; and what proportion this represented of the total university student population in Scotland.

Mr. Brooke: The available information is as follows:

University first degrees awarded: 1983

	*PPE		Philosophy		Economics		All full-time and sandwich undergraduate level students 1983-84
	Number	Per cent.†	Number	Per cent.†	Number	Per cent.†

† Percentages are of all first degrees awarded in 1983

Information about the number of degrees in politics is not readily available.

Minimum Grants (Abolition)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what response he has sent to the chairman of the Federation of Conservative Students in answer to the letter he received from him earlier this month relating to the proposed abolition of minimum grants.

Sir Keith Joseph: My response was as follows:

M. H. Glendening Esq.
National Chairman
The Federation of Conservative Students
32 Smith Square
Westminster
London SWIP 3HH 14 December 1984

Dear Mr. Glendening,

Thank you for your letter of 5 December. You will have seen the outcome of last week's events — and you will have observed that there is to be a review of students finance — which should provide an opportunity for a number of options to be considered.

Sincerely
Keith Joseph

Astronomical Observatories (South Africa)

Mr. Beith asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what discussions he has had with the Science and Engineering Research Council about its funding for astronomical observatories in South Africa.

Mr. Brooke: None.

Teachers (Appointments)

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether his Department issues any advice or guidelines to local education authorities concerning the appointment of teachers who have previously been convicted of any criminal offence; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The Department issued administrative memorandum 3/82 on 6 September 1982 to local education authorities and other bodies involved in the appointment of teachers. This sets out the procedures for dealing with cases of misconduct, including criminal offences, by teachers and others who work with children, such as residential school staff, youth and community workers. My right hon. Friend has powers to bar such persons and when he does so details are given in confidence to local education authorities and all other bodies concerned. Procedures are kept under review to ensure they are as effective as possible and the Department will be taking part in the review of arrangements for making available information about criminal backgrounds announced on 19 December by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department.

University Arts Degree Courses (Rejections)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what percentage of secondary school sixth formers who applied for an arts degree university course for the academic year 1984-85 received notifications of rejection.

Mr. Brooke: Information on university applicants from school sixth forms is not readily available. In 1983, the latest year for which information is available, 47 per cent. of all home candidates who applied for a university arts degree through the UCCA were not accepted for any degree course.

Students (Tuition Fees)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many students of British nationality are meeting the full costs of their tuition fees and accommodation from their own personal resources at both undergraduate and postgraduate level during the present academic year.

Mr. Brooke: Information relating to nationality is not available. In 1982-83, the latest year for which information is available, the number of full-time students at British universities, paying fees at the home rate, who were self-supporting was as follows:

	Numbers	per cent.
Undergraduates	7,118	3·0
Postgraduates	5,206	16·7

Comparable information for public sector higher education students is not available.

Student Grants

Mr. Tracey asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science whether, pursuant to his answer to the hon. Member for Surbiton on 10 December, he is now able to announce the time scale and terms of reference of the review of the student support system.

Mr. Brooke: No.

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what arrangements are made, in calculating residual income for the purposes of parental contribution for student grant, in respect of personnel serving in Her Majesty's Forces who are living in married quarters and pay rent or have deductions from their salary in lieu of rent, and do not have mortgages.

Mr. Brooke: No account is taken of any rent payments or deductions from salary in lieu of rent in determining residual income. No special arrangements are made in determining residual income in respect of any occupational groups including members of Her Majesty's Forces.

School Meals

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will convert the expenditure figures on school meals in table 2:10 of the Government's Expenditure Plans 1984-85 to 1986-87 to 1983-84 constant prices.

Mr. Dunn: The information is as follows. 1983-84 constant prices are obtained by adjusting the cash figures from table 2:10 of the Government's Expenditure Plans (Cmnd. 9143) by the latest forecasts for the GDP deflator at market prices.

	Cash	1983-84 constant prices
	£ million	£ million
1978-79	376	639
1979-80	409	594

	Cash £ million	1983-84 constant prices £ million
1980-81	391	479
1981-82	390	434
1982-83	404	422
1983-84	414	414
1984-85	257	245
1985-86	270	247
1986-87	270	237

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many children received, or are expected to receive, school meals in each year from 1984-85 to 1986-87; and what proportion of the school population this represents.

Mr. Dunn: In October 1983, the latest date for which firm census figures are available, 3,481,837 children received school meals; this represented 51·4 per cent. of the pupils in school on the day of the census. The figures for October 1984 will be available shortly. The number of children receiving school meals in future years will depend upon a number of variable factors and cannot be estimated precisely.

Special Schools

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will convert the special schools recurrent expenditure figures in table 2:10 of the Government's Expenditure Plans 1984-85 to 1986-87 to 1983-84 constant prices.

Mr. Dunn: The information is as follows. 1983-84 constant prices are obtained by adjusting the cash figures from table 2:10 of the Government's Expenditure Plans (Cmnd. 9143) by the latest forecast for the GDP deflator at market prices.

	Cash £ million	1983-84 constant prices £ million

1979-80	249	362
1980-81	309	378
1981-82	347	386
1982-83	385	402
1983-84	399	399
1984-85	385	368
1985-86	400	365
1986-87	410	360

NATIONAL FINANCE

Mortgage Interest Relief

Mr. Chris Smith asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the total value of mortgage interest relief forgone as tax income by the Inland Revenue, and the average amount of relief received by each mortgagor, in England and in London, for 1984-85.

Mr. Moore: The latest estimates are as follows:

	Mortgage Interest Relief
	Total cost £ million	Cost per mortgagor £
London	480	620
England	3,100	500
United Kingdom	3,500	500

Personal Taxation

Mr. Deakins asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the trend in the level of direct taxation on earned incomes since 1979; and if there is any correlation between this trend and changes in the economic performance of the United Kingdom.

Mr. Moore: Income tax has fallen as a proportion of earnings for the great majority of earners since 1979. Economic performance is affected by a number of factors and it is difficult to isolate the effect of one particular variable. However, a lower burden of income tax should, by improving incentives and thereby encouraging work, risk-taking, and enterprise contribute to improved economic performance.

Superannuation Fund (Staff)

Mr. Freeman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the size of the staff at the superannuation fund's office at the latest available date in comparison with five years ago.

Mr. Moore: The staff in post at the superannuation fund's office was 280 at 1 December 1984. The figure at 1 December 1979 was 267.

Pension Funds (Taxation)

Mr. Freeman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proportion of the yield to the Exchequer in 1985-86 of a 30 per cent. tax on the investment income of occupational pension funds is estimated to be lost by reduced corporation tax payments, assuming the reduced income of funds is made good solely by employers.

Mr. Moore: This would depend on the levels of income of the occupational pension funds and the tax status of the corresponding companies in 1985-86. But a very tentative estimate based on 1984-85 estimates of pension fund income and company profits is that about 20 per cent. of the yield might be lost.

Interest Rates

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the real rate of interest each quarter from the beginning of 1979.

Mr. Ian Stewart: There is no precise practical definition of real interest rates. An article in the December 1983 Bank of England Quarterly Bulletin discusses some of the issues.

Dual Resident Companies (Taxation)

Mr. Freeman asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimates he has made of the effect on the flow of direct investment from the United States of America into the United Kingdom of his draft proposals to change the basis of taxation of dual resident companies.

Mr. Moore: I do not expect these proposals to have any significant effect on the flow of inward investment from the United States.

EC (Contributions)

Mr. Spearing asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report an updated version of table 1 of the Sixth Report of the Select Committee on European Legislation showing in respect of the United Kingdom's contributions to the European Economic Community the figures for 1983, and the estimate for 1984.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The information for the calendar year 1983 and then for the first three-quarters of 1984 is given in the following table. Information concerning the payments and receipts for the final quarter of 1984 are not yet fully available.

Payments	VAT Own Resources/ GNP-based Financial Contributions	Sugar and Isoglucose Levies	Agricultural Levies	Customs Duties	Total Gross Payments

Local Authority Expenditure

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will compare current and capital local expenditure in 1978-79 with 1983-84, in actual and percentage terms.

Mr. Peter Rees: Local authority expenditure figures for Great Britain were published in the 1984 Public Expenditure White Paper (Cmnd. 9143). The figures requested are:

	1978-79 £ million	1983-84 £ million	Percentage increase
Local authority current expenditure (Great Britain)	14,102	28,410	101·5
Local authority capital expenditure (Great Britain	3,599	3,829	6·4
Total	17,701	32,239	82·1

The figures for 1983-84 will be updated in the next Public Expenditure White Paper. The capital expenditure figures will be about £400 million higher, as announced in Cmnd. 9323 (Cash limits 1983-84, provisional outturn). Capital expenditure figures in the White Paper are expressed net of sales of council houses and other assets, which have grown considerably since 1978-79.

Government Expenditure

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the total Government expenditure for 1983 and 1984; and what percentage of gross domestic product this represents for those years.

Mr. Peter Rees: The 1984 "Autumn Statement" showed estimated outturn for the public expenditure planning total in 1983-84 of £120·3 billion and in 1984-85 of nearly £128 billion. This represents about 42½ per cent. of GDP in each year.

VAT Office (South Shields)

Dr. David Clark asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the future of the value added tax office in South Shields.

Mr. Hayhoe: Customs and Excise has reviewed the organisation and location of its VAT offices and proposals are being discussed with the Civil Service trade unions including a proposal to close this office.

Workplace Nurseries

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many other member states of the European Economic Community tax the benefits of workplace nurseries.

Mr. Moore: The tax treatment of specific benefits-in-kind varies from country to country. As far as I am aware, however, only the Federal Republic of Germany specifically exempts by law the benefit of employer subsidised nurseries from tax.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) if he will defer collection, without liability to back tax, of tax on workplace nurseries until a test case has clarified the relevant law.

(2) how many employers have been approached for details of their workplace nurseries following the decision to tax employees on the benefits from such nurseries.

(3) how many individuals are or have been the subject of personal tax claims in respect of workplace nursery benefits.

(4) how many individuals have been asked for arrears of tax to cover nursery benefits in previous years.

Mr. Moore: No. I am advised that the law is quite clear on this point: the benefit that directors and certain employees (currently those earning at a rate of £8,500 a year or more) receive from employer-subsidised nurseries has been liable to tax since legislation first introduced by the then Labour Government in 1948. I regret that the detailed information requested on the number of employers and individuals concerned is not kept centrally.

EEC (Gross Domestic Product)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing for the last eight six-monthly periods for which figures are available, for each member state of the European Economic Community and for the European Economic Community as a whole (i) increase in nominal gross domestic product, (ii) increase in gross domestic product output volume, (iii) increase in gross domestic product price deflator, (iv) seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment, (v) surplus in trading goods and (vi) surplus in invisible goods.

Mr. Peter Rees: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Average Wages

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the national average wage in 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984, and the tax threshold for (a) a single person and (b) a married couple; and if he will show (a) and (b) as a percentage of the national average wage for each of those years.

Mr. Moore: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Privatised Public Corporations

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing, for each of the public corporations privatised during the period 1979 to 1984 (a) the number of shareholders by size band of holding immediately after flotation and (b) the same information at each succeeding 31 December.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish an update of the table on shareholdings in privatised public corporations given in reply to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) on 29 July, Official Report, columns 725-8.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing for each of the public corporations privatised in the period 1979 to 1984 (i) the gross proceeds from flotation or sale, (ii) the prior claims on such proceeds to meet contingent liabilities such as underfunded pension schemes, (iii) commissions, fees, advertising expenses and so on paid to merchant bankers and other advisers and (iv) the net proceeds accruing to the Consolidated Fund.

Mr. Moore: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a list of merchant banks which have performed work either for the Government in the process of privatising public corporations, or for the public corporations themselves, giving the total sums paid to them from public funds, analysed by the particular privatisation involved and the nature of the expense such as fees and underwriting commissions.

Mr. Moore: A table showing the merchant banks who have advised the Government or acted as underwriters in the major privatisations to date was given in reply to the hon. Member's earlier question. This brought up to date the information given in reply to the hon.Member for Thurrock (Dr. McDonald) on 3 April 1984.

My earlier reply to the hon. Member also gave the total cost of the fees and commissions paid to the firms listed, for each privatisation. It is not our practice to disclose the value of individual contracts between Departments and their advisers.

The appointment of advisers by the companies concerned is a matter for them, not the Government.

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps he is taking to ensure that the limitations on the size of non-Government individual shareholdings written into the articles of association of privatised public corporations are not breached, whether through the use of nominee shareholdings or through individuals acting in concert.

Mr. Moore: Where a limitation on the size of individual shareholdings appears in a company's articles of association, it is for the company to see to its enforcement. The Companies Act 1981 requires disclosure of individual shareholdings in a public company above 5 per cent. at 1 per cent. intervals thereafter, and gives such companies extensive powers to investigate the ownership of their shares. Failure to provide information requested under the relevant provisions of the Act is a criminal offence and provides grounds for an application to the court disenfranchising all the shares in question. In addition the Department of Trade and Industry have power to investigate the ownership of shares under the Companies Act 1948.

EC (Economic and Financial Statistics)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing for the last eight six-monthly periods for which figures are available, for each member state and for the European Economic Community as a whole: index of rate of return on capital; index of total personal income before tax; index of total disposable income; personal savings ratio; tax as a proportion of wage income for the lower quartile; tax as a proportion of wage income for the middle quartile; tax as a proportion of wage income for the upper quartile; tax as a proportion of wage income for the mean income; tax as a proportion of income for the median income; public expenditure as a percentage of gross domestic product; degree of capacity utilisation in industry; gross fixed investment as a percentage of gross domestic product of (a) private sector, and (b) public sector, gross domestic fixed capital formation of (i) a private sector, (ii) public sector, gross domestic fixed capital formation in (a) private dwellings, (b) public dwellings, (c) plant and machinery, (d) other new buildings and works, index of output per person employed in (i) the whole economy, (ii) production industries, (iii) manufacturing industries.

Mr. Moore: No. The information requested could only be produced at disproportionate cost.

Taxation Allowances

Mr. Marlow asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what he estimates would be the cost in 1985-86 of (a) indexing married and single personal allowances, (b) increasing married and single personal allowances at twice the rate of inflation, (c) increasing the married man's tax allowance by the rate of inflation, (d) indexing the single person's tax allowance by the rate of inflation and (e) providing a tax allowance to spouses not in receipt of income equal to 10 per cent., 20 per cent., 30 per cent., 50 per cent., 75 per cent. and 100 per cent. of the single person's allowance.

Mr. Moore: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

National Insurance Contributions

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what proposals he has to remove tax relief on national insurance contributions from employers and employees.

Mr. Moore: Employees do not receive relief from tax on national insurance contributions. Employers do receive tax relief on their contributions. I have no plans to alter this position.

Uniform Traveller Allowances

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Government support the EEC proposal for uniform traveller allowances for day trippers across national borders.

Mr. Lawson: It is not clear which proposal the right hon. Member has in mind but if he will send me further particulars, I will write to him.

Taxation

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if, for each decile group in the income distribution, he will publish information showing the amount of taxes paid as a proportion of gross income broken down between (i) direct taxes, (ii) indirect taxes and (iii) all taxes for the most recent year or tax year available; and whether he will also show the average level of gross income in each of the income groups specified.

Mr. Peter Rees [pursuant to his reply, 20 December 1984]: Information of this kind based on the 1983 family expenditure survey is published regularly in Economic Trends. The latest article with data for 1982 appeared in Economic Trends number 361 (November 1983). The next article entitled "The Effects of Taxes and Benefits on Household incomes 1983" will appear in Economic Trends number 374 (December 1984) to be published in the middle of January 1985.

Pensioners (Lump Sum Payments)

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will estimate the revenue in 1985-86 from taxing that part of the lump sum taken on retirement in 1985-86 accruing to members of pension schemes from contributions after April 1985.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 20 December 1984]: The Revenue would depend, amongst other things, on the rate at which tax was charged and the rules for calculating that part of each lump sum accruing from contributions after 1985. However, any yield in 1985-86 is likely to be small.

Privatisation (Fees and Commissions)

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list in the Official Report (a) updated figures for fees paid, including fees to auditors in respect of the first share issues for Amersham International Ltd., Associated British Ports, British Aerospace, British Railways Board Hotels, Britoil, Cable and Wireless and the National Freight Corporation and (b) all the fees and commissions paid to primary underwriters, sub-underwriters, financial advisers, legal advisers, auditors and stockbrokers in respect of the second Cable and Wireless issue, the second Associated British Ports issue, Enterprise Oil, Sealink, Jaguar, British Telecom and the 1979 and 1983 BP issues; and if he will name each firm concerned.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 18 December 1984, c. 122]: Details of the primary underwriters, sub-underwriters, financial advisers, legal advisers and stockbrokers appointed for the sales listed in the first part of the question were given in my reply to the hon. Member for Thurrock (Dr. McDonald) on 3 April 1984. In addition W. Greenwell and Co. offered financial advice for the Amersham International, Cable and Wireless (1981) and Associated British Ports (1983) sales. The names of the accountants who acted as auditors in the sales covered in that reply together with revised updated totals of fees and commissions paid, are as follows:

The main firms involved under each of the headings specified for the sales listed in the second part of the question, together with the overall total of fees and commissions paid, are as follows:

[Table 2]

The information and figures given do not include advice paid for by the companies being privatised which is not a matter for the Government. It is not the practice to disclose the value of individual contracts between Departments and their advisers. No advisers were retained by the Government in the disposal of British Rail hotels.

Tax Allowances and Child Benefit

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what has been the increase in real terms in (a) tax allowances since the temporary 1979-80 rates introduced by the Finance Act 1979 and (b) child benefit since April 1979, specifying in each case any assumptions used.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 17 December 1984, c. 64]: Because of the changes introduced in the June 1979 Budget, a comparison of the kind requested would not be appropriate. However, during 1978-79, child support for a family paying tax at the basic rate with a child under 11 averaged £3.20 per week. In 1984-85 it will be £6.63 per week—an increase in real terms of about 17·br per cent. Over the same period, personal allowances have increased in real terms by about 16 per cent.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Ethiopia

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether he will publish in the Official Report the text of the letter about the Ethiopian famine from the Minister for Overseas Development to the hon. Member for Rutland and Melton, dated 11 December, following the answer of 27 November, Official Report, column 425-26.

Mr. Raison: The text is as follows:

The Ethiopian Relief and Rehabilitation Commission (RRC) say that they have no detailed mortality figures for famine or famine-related diseases, due to the communications difficulties and the impossibility of determining the situation on the ground in large parts of the country. Apparently, the only way to collect reliable statistics would be to canvass each peasants' association, which is regarded as an impossible task given other urgent calls on resources and time.

We understand the following mortality statistics are available for November from certain feeding centres:

(a) Korem: Save the Children Fund (SCF) report November average daily death rate of 28 from camp of 30,000 people. Rate had been 100 per day in October, of which 60 per cent. was due to measles epidemic.

(b) Bati: RRC report average death rate of 100 per day from centre of some 17,000 people.

(c) Mekele: The International Committee of the Red Cross report average rate of 30-40 deaths per day in the feeding centre which can take up to 600 children. Relief workers in Mekele say the situation has been improving steadily since about mid-November with greater and more regular food deliveries.

The RRC emphasise that these statistics can only demonstrate the rough magnitude of the problem. In areas without feeding centres the death rate is likely to be higher, ad probably rising, as compared with some established feeding centres where it seems generally to have been falling during November. But some voluntary agencies report the situation in northern Shewa and southern Welo is rapidly deteriorating, while the situation at Mile and Asalta in eastern Welo is also bad. World Vision report feeding 4,500 malnourished children at Alamata in November and providing medical assistance to 6,000 people in Lalibela area in the same period.

During my visit it was clear that the massive relief operation now under way — to which the RAF detachment and the British voluntary agencies are making such a significant contribution — has begun to alleviate the problem in many famine areas. In no small measure this is due to the achievement of the RRC in dramatically improving the handling capacity at the port of Assab; and to more effective coordination both between donors and with the Ethiopian authorities.

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a further statement updating the information contained in his earlier replies to the hon. Member for Denton and Reddish, Offical Report, 4 December, column 135, and 3 December, column 14, concerning grain supplies and supplementary food and edible oil requirements in Ethiopia.

Mr. Raison: On 4 December, the European Council pledged that the Community and its member states would provide 1·2 million tonnes of grain to countries in Africa affected by famine before the next harvest; and the President of the United States of America recently announced the release of 300,000 tonnes from the US strategic grain stockpile for the same purpose. It is not yet possible to translate these pledges into a timetable for deliveries to Ethiopia or any other specific country.

Recent reports of supplementary food and edible oil requirements in Ethiopia have varied but on 11 December the United Nations Co-ordinator for Emergency Operations in Ethiopia estimated them to be 100,000 tonnes and 30,000 tonnes respectively, over the next twelve months.

Mr. Silvester asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what further help he proposes to provide for those affected by the drought in Ethiopia.

Mr. Raison: I am making available £250,000 each to Save the Children Fund, Christian Aid and War on Want. I am arranging for the specific uses of each allocation to be settled with these agencies.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Prisoners (Mental Hospitals)

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) how many people were committed to hospital from prison under section 37 of the Mental Health Act 1983 and 1984; how many returned to prison; and how many of those stayed in prison until release;

(2) if he is satisfied with the current situation regarding persons committed to hospital under section 37 of the Mental Health Act who are kept instead in prison; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: I assume that the hon. member is referring to the number of people detained in prison on remand pending trial or sentence in respect of whom the courts make hospital orders, and the number who are subsequently detained in prison as a place of safety under section 37(4) of the Mental Health Act 1983 pending admission to hospital.

In 1983 a total of 766 prisoners were admitted to hospital in pursuance of a hospital order, and 532 prisoners were removed to hospital after detention under the provisions of section 37(4). The corresponding figures for 1984 are not yet available.

Under section 37(4) a court may make a hospital order only if it is satisfied on the evidence of the doctor who would be in charge of the patient's treatment or of some other person representing the managers of the hospital that a place will be available within 28 days of the making of the order. Accordingly it is now very rare for there to be difficulties about the admission to hospital of a patient held in prison as a place of safety.

Prisons are required to notify the Home Office of any case where it appears that the 28-day period may expire without the hospital place becoming available: in no case so reported recently has a prisoner had to be released because a place could not be made available for him within the statutory 28-day period.

Civil Defence College, Easingwold

Mr. Neil Thorne asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he has taken to expand the facilities of the library at the Civil Defence college, Easingwold.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Banff and Buchan (Mr. McQuarrie) on 22 November, at column 250.

Mr. Neil Thorne asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will establish light and heavy rescue courses at the Civil Defence college, Easingwold.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Guidance about planning for a wartime rescue service is being considered. When this is available we will consider whether the college should run courses on rescue.

Identity Cards

Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will publish a consultative document outlining the arguments for and against the introduction of a national identity card scheme to incorporate an assessment of the costs and merits of different types of identity card.

Mr. Giles Shaw: No.

Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the numbers of elderly, young and other groups who regularly carry means of identification; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I have no information of this sort.

Legislation (Changes)

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement on the procedures used in his Department to assess the desirability of potential changes in the law and the criteria on which he decides to propose such changes to Parliament.

Mr. Mellor: Both procedures and criteria necessarily vary in accordance with the subject matter.

For the purpose of assessing the desirability of changes in the law, it is often appropriate to seek the views of the public and of interested bodies by means of a Green Paper or other consultative document. On some subjects my right hon. and learned Friend receives expert advice from such bodies as the Law Commission, the Criminal Law Revision Committee or the Advisory Committee on Animal Experiments. In certain instances he may refer a question to a departmental committee, working party or other body specially constituted for the purpose.

So far as the criminal law is concerned, the principal factors to which my right hon. and learned Friend has regard in proposing changes to Parliament on whether the conduct in question merits criminal sanctions to deter people from it and to punish those who are not deterred; whether other less drastic measures of control would be ineffective, impracticable or insufficient; and whether the law as amended would be clear and enforceable.

Heroin

Mr. Harvey asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department when he intends to introduce legislation to combat the distribution and usage of heroin; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Mellor: Unlawful importation, production, supply and possession of heroin are already offences under the Misuse of Drugs Act 1971. A person convicted of unlawful possession faces a sentence of up to five years' imprisonment. The maximum penalty for unlawful supply and other trafficking offences is currently 14 years' imprisonment, and the Government have announced its intention to increase this to life imprisonment. My hon. Friend the Member for Delyn (Mr. Raffan), has introduced a Bill, due for a Second Reading on 1 February 1985, which may provide an early opportunity to give effect to the proposed change.

Burglary

Mr. Evennett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the Metropolitan police are introducing any additional measures to combat burglary in the Metropolitan police district; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 20 December at columns 288-89. I further understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that he places continued emphasis on community involvement through such schemes as neighbourhood watch in tackling the problem of crime in London, particularly burglary.

Young Offenders

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many young offenders under the age of 18 years have been placed in detention centres in each year since the implementation of the Criminal Justice Act 1982.

Mr. Mellor: About 4,100 persons aged under 18 were received into detention centres under detention centre orders between 24 May and 31 December 1983 and about 6,300 between 1 January and 30 November 1984.

Drink-Driving

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many cases of criminal proceedings were brought against car drivers in respect of reckless driving resulting in the death of other motorists or pedestrians, where the driver concerned produced a positive alcohol breath-test in 1984; and during which month of 1984 most of these offences occurred.

Mr. Mellor: The available information relates to the offence of causing death by reckless driving and is published annually in "Offences Relating to Motor Vehicles, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables" (tables 5 and 7 of the issue for 1983). Additional details could be provided only at disproportionate cost. Information for 1984 is not yet available.

Television Reception

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what proportion of people who cannot receive television pictures in the United Kingdom are located in Scotland.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply I gave to his question on 14 November at column 258.

Metropolitan Police (Computer)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department (1) whether he will describe, in relation to the pilot crime reporting computer system of the Metropolitan police, its location and the number of terminals attached to the system; and if he will make a statement;

(2) whether he will list all the data fields used in the pilot crime reporting computer system of the Metropolitan police which are used for crime reporting.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that an experimental automated crime reporting system with one dedicated terminal has been running on P district of the Metropolitan police since 1979. The system covers only offences of burglary, theft from the person, robbery and indecency. The details held in respect of each offence are as follows: crime book number; report number; classification; date reported; whether detected or undetected; number of prisoners (if any); officer in the case; date/time of the offence; type of property stolen; value stolen; value recovered; type of premises; beat number; exhibit transfer reference number; point of entry; any marks found; details of suspects (i.e. sex, identification code, approximate ages); features of crime (up to three accepted), and location of crime.

Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament (Police Computer)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether information relating to the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament is stored on the Metropolitan 'C' Department computer; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Giles Shaw: I understand from the Commissioner of Police of the Metropolis that no information about the Campaign for Nuclear Disarmament is stored on the computer facilities dedicated to 'C' department.

Metropolitan Police (Fingerprint Recognition)

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether he will print the total cost of the automatic fingerprint recognition system of the Metropolitan police; and if he will make a statement as to the cost effectiveness and technological effectiveness of the system.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The total cost of the equipment comprising this system was £1,654,000. The system enables fingerprint marks found at scenes of crime to be searched against the database more quickly and effectively and in some cases part-marks which were previously deemed to contain insufficient detail to support practical searching can now be processed and identified. The system has only been in operation since August of this year and it is therefore too soon to evaluate its effectiveness, but its use has been projected as leading to an additional 1,200 identifications annually.

Probation Officers

Mr. Howarth asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department to whom, and in what way, probation officers are accountable for their decisions recommending ex-offenders for employment.

Mr. Mellor: Probation officers are accountable through their chief probation officers to the probation committees which employ them.

Mr. Howarth asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what guidance is given to probation officers concerning their recommendation of ex-officers for employment, particularly where that employment relates to young people.

Mr. Mellor: Guidance issued by the Home Office in 1963 made it clear that a probation officer should disclose relevant facts relating to character and personality when recommending an ex-offender for employment. In the case of prisoners released on licence a condition, where appropriate, is imposed forbidding work or other organised activities involving children; this is drawn to the attention of the supervising probation officer. My right hon. and learned Friend is arranging for the duty of probation officers dealing with child sex offenders to take every step to prevent contact with children to be spelt out even more firmly.

Police Drug Squad

Mr. Sackville asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what information he has as to the current strength of the police drug squad.

Mr. Giles Shaw: On 31 December 1983, the latest date for which figures are available, the number of officers serving in specialist force drug squads in England and Wales was 554. At that time 41 of the 43 forces have had special drug units but since 1 November 1984 all 43 forces have had special drug units but since 1 November 1984 all 43 forces have had such units and the current strength may therefore be higher. My hon. Friend may have in mind the strength of the drug squad in Greater Manchester police: this is currently 21 officers.

Representation of the People Bill

Mr. Kaufman asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will provide the information and the details of the calculations on which he based his statement, Official Report, 10 December, column 755, that clause 1 of the Representation of the People Bill would enfranchise over half a million new electors.

Mr. Mellor: The statement was based on the best estimates of Her Majesty's diplomatic missions in countries where significant numbers of British citizens are resident. These estimates relied on the information available from official or other sources in the country concerned.

West Yorkshire Probation Service

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many orders were being supervised by West Yorkshire probation service on 31 March 1983 and 31 March 1984 in respect of (a) supervision orders, (b) probation orders, (c) suspended sentence supervision orders, (d) young prisoners' licences, (e) parole, (f) life licences, (g) matrimonial supervision orders, (h) fine supervision orders and (i) any other orders.

Mr. Mellor: Information relating to 31 March 1983 is given in the following table. Corresponding figures for 31 March 1984 are not available centrally because of industrial action by some members of the probation service.

*Persons supervised by the West Yorkshire probation service on 31 March 1983 by type of supervision

Prison

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what progress has been made in implementing the proposals and recommendations in the report of the control review committee on the long-term prison system.

Mr. Mellors: Work on this wide ranging report is being vigourously pursued and my right hon. and learned Friend intends to make a more detailed statement about our progress around Easter 1985.

Fire Services

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the authorised establishment levels of uniformed firefighters for each of the metropolitan county brigades for each year from 1974 to the present, indicating where changes made to the basic working weeks have had an influence on the figures.

Mr. Giles Shaw : There is no requirement for my right hon. and learned Friend's approval of fire brigade establishments. Closure of fire stations and reductions in the number of appliances or of whole-time members of a brigade whose duties normally include fire fighting and part-time members of a brigade require his consent under section 19 of the Fire Services Act 1947 (as amended). Details of establishments are published annually as a Command Paper in the Report of Her Majesty's Chief Inspector of Fire Services. The report for 1983 (Cmnd 9277) contains at appendix 5 a bar chart showing the effect of successive reductions in a fireman's working week.

Soliciting

Mr. Parris asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give figures for (a) the number of women imprisoned for soliciting imprisoned after a non-payment of a fine imposed for soliciting and prosecuted for soliciting in the last year before female soliciting ceased, under the terms of the Criminal Justice Act 1982, to be an imprisonable offence and (b) the number of women imprisoned for non-payment of a fine for soliciting, and the number of prosecutions for female soliciting in the year following that change.

Mr. Mellor: Section 71 of the Criminal Justice Act 1982, which abolished imprisonment for loitering and soliciting for purposes of prostitution, was implemented on 31 January 1983. For the readily available information on the numbers of prostitutes committed into custody in default of payment of a fine in the calendar years 1982 and 1983, I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply given to a question from the hon. Member for St. Helens, South (Mr. Bermingham) on 6 December at columns 280-1. I shall reply as soon as possible to the other parts of the question.

Immigration

Mr. Tony Lloyd asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department why statistics on entry clearance refusals are only available for the Indian sub-continent.

Mr. Waddington: As previously stated in reply to a similar Question, the collection of data on applications for entry clearance from countries outside the Indian sub-continent was terminated at the end of 1979 because it was considered that its usefulness did not justify the resources required to undertake it. Information continues to be collected for the countries of the Indian sub-continent because of the large number of applications there. Also, arrangements are in hand so that similar statistics can be produced for Hong Kong. Information on acceptances for settlement and admissions of husbands and fiances is available for all countries.

Deportation

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will take steps to reduce the involvement of the police in deportation work.

Mr. Brittan: Arrangements have been made for the Immigration Service to take over responsibility from the police service in Great Britain for serving deportation orders, including tracing the subject of the order where necessary, making the practical arrangements for removal in most cases, and the service of detention and restriction orders on persons subject to deportation proceedings. Responsibility for escorting and where necessary arresting the subjects of deportation and detention orders will remain with the police. The change, which will be reviewed after a year's operation, is intended to relieve pressure on police manpower and make better use of existing resources within the Immigration Service.

Parliamentary Boundary Commissions

Mr. Butterfill asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will announce the membership of the Parliamentary Boundary Commissions for England, Scotland, Wales and Northern Ireland with effect from 1 January 1985.

Mr. Brittan: Mr. Speaker will remain of all four Commissions. The other members of the Commissions for England, Wales and Northern Ireland will be as follows:

Commission
Commission for England	Appointed by
The Hon. Mr. Justice Walton	The Lord Chancellor
His Honour Judge John Newey QC	The Home Secretary

Commission
Mr. T M H Scott MA	The Secretary of State for the Environment
Commission for Wales
The Hon. Mr. Justice Kenneth Jones	The Lord Chancellor
Mr. J. R. Long LLB DPA	The Home Secretary
Mr. M A McLaggan JP DL MA	The Secretary of State for Wales
Commission for Northern Ireland
The Hon. Mr. Justice Hutton	The Lord Chief Justice for Northern Ireland
Mr. P G Duffy FCCA FCMA AICS	The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland
Mr. W T Ewing OBE LLB JP	The Secretary of State for Northern Ireland

The appointment of Mr. Justice Walton will expire on 31 December 1986; the other appointments expire on 31 December 1988.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland is not yet able to announce the full composition of the Scottish Commission and he will make a separate announcement in due course.

Coal Industry Dispute

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many complaints have been made against the police in relation to activities during the course of the miners' dispute; and how many complaints have been upheld.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 14 December 1984, c. 638]: The available information is that in the period from 13 March to 11 December 1984, 516 complaints were made against police officers relating to actions arising during the course of the dispute and that 96 of these have been withdrawn. Most of the complaints are still under investigation and statistics on the number substantiated could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Young Persons (Remand)

Mr. Alex Carlile asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many young persons, male and female, aged (a) 15 to 16 years and (b) 17 to 21 years have been held on remand in adult establishments so far during 1984.

Mr. Mellor [pursuant to his reply, 14 December 1984, c. 633]: The readily available information relates to initial receptions of persons aged under 21 on remand into adult prisons and is given in the following table. Information for 1984 is not yet available. It is normal for young male prisoners to be kept apart from adult prisoners whereas in establishments for females women and girls may mix.

Untried and convicted unsentenced persons aged 15 and under 21 received initially into an adult Prison Department establishment in England and Wales—1983

(2) Cardiff, Dorchester, Exeter, Liverpool, Manchester, Norwich, Swansea, and Winchester.
(3) Ashford, Low Newton, Manchester, Pucklechurch, and Risley.

Attacks on Women (Statistics)

Mr. Corbyn asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the number of attacks on women in the Metropolitan police area for each year since 1979 and for each month to date in 1984 by category of (a) rape, (b) indecent assault by age group and (c) incest; and what is the number of successful prosecutions.

Mr. Giles Shaw [pursuant to his reply, 19 December 1984, c. 160]: The following table gives the most recent information available on prosecutions.

DEFENCE

Wood Farm Estate, Malvern

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many married quarters on the Wood Farm estate, Malvern, have been declared surplus to his Department's requirements; and what means are used to make their availability known to service men under his discounted sales scheme.

Mr. Lee: No married quarters on the Wood Farm estate, Malvern, have been declared surplus to Ministry of Defence requirements. All suitable surplus married quarters for sale to service men under the discounted sales scheme are advertised in bulletins issued by the joint services married quarters sales office.

Mr. Pavitt asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the number of units of accommodation owned by his Department in the Wood Farm estate, Malvern, for married officers, single officers and married and single soldiers of other ranks and the number at present occupied; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The Ministry of Defence accommodation at the Wood Farm estate, Malvern, for both married and single service men, consists of eight married officers' quarters and 23 married soldiers' quarters.

At present six of these quarters are occupied by married service men and their families, and one is allocated for occupation in the near future. A further two soldiers' quarters are being used as single accommodation for senior NCOs.

The future accommodation requirements at this site are currently under review.

Fazakerley (Estate and Assets)

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Defence what approach has been made to his Department by Williams Motors Ltd. about the future of the estate and assets at Fazakerley.

Mr. Lee: When the present repair contracts with Williams Motors expire at the end of 1985, under the terms of its licence the company will need to vacate the premises. However, we are exploring whether it would be interested in buying the property from us.

Northern Ireland

Mr. Archer asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many soldiers have been prosecuted since 1969 in Northern Ireland for offences against the person allegedly committed while on duty; and of whom (a) how many were convicted and of what offences and (b) how many were acquitted and of what charges.

Mr. Lee: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Battersea (Mr. Dubs) on 9 April at column 44.

Mr. Archer asked the Secretary of State for Defence, since 1969, how many personal injury claims have been made against the Ministry of Defence for torts allegedly committed by soldiers on duty in Northern Ireland; and of which (a) how many have been settled out of court and how many of these were in the plaintiff's favour and (b) how many have gone to court and how many of these were settled in the plaintiff's favour.

Mr. Lee: I have nothing to add to the reply I gave to the hon. Member for Battersea (Mr. Dubs) on 9 April at column 43.

Military Exercises

Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) if he will list all military exercises involving British forces in 1984, the dates of duration and other countries involved;

(2) if he will list all joint British, Turkish and North Atlantic Treaty Organisation exercises involving military co-operation between Britain and Turkey since 1978.

Mr. Stanley: Considerations of both security and disproportionate cost prevent me from publishing a comprehensive list of exercises involving British forces in 1984, and a comprehensive list of exercises since 1978 involving British and Turkish forces. Britain and Turkey do of course take part in a number of NATO exercises each year.

Iraqi Military Personnel

Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many Iraqi air force personnel have received training at Carlisle in each year since 1979.

Mr. Lee: There are no RAF training facilities at Carlisle. Commercial training at Carlisle airport is not the responsibility of the Ministry of Defence.

Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many Iraqi military personnel received training in the United Kingdom in 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984.

Mr. Lee: Details of training given to foreign nationals is confidential between Her Majesty's Government and the Government concerned. Some members of the Iraqi armed forces have been trained in United Kingdom military establishments this year and some were here in 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982 and 1983.

NATO (Military Actions)

Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the policy of Her Majesty's Government towards military actions by the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation Governments outside the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation area.

Mr. Stanley: The North Atlantic treaty is concerned only with the collective defence of the Alliance member states and the maintenance of security within the North Atlantic area. Military actions by NATO members outside this area are a matter for the individual Governments concerned.

Turkey (British Military Personnel)

Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many British military personnel were based in Turkey in 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984, respectively.

Mr. Stanley: The number of British service personnel stationed in Turkey at 1 April for each of the requested years is as follows:

	Service personnel
1979	77
1980	64
1981	16
1982	14
1983	14
1984	13

Turkish Military Personnel

Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many Turkish military personnel received training in Britain in 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984, respectively.

Mr. Lee: Details of training given to foreign nationals is confidential between Her Majesty's Government and the Government concerned. Some members of the Turkish armed forces have been trained in United Kingdom military establishments this year and some were here in 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982 and 1983.

Turkey (British Naval Ships)

Mr. O'Neill asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many British naval ships paid visits to Turkish ports in 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984, respectively.

Mr. Stanley: The number of Her Majesty's ships and royal fleet auxiliaries visiting Turkish ports each year since 1979 was:

	Number
1979	8
1980	11
1981	3
1982	4
1983	3
1984	1

Royal Auxiliary Air Force

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether Her Majesty's Government are currently giving consideration to giving back a flying role to the Royal Auxiliary Air Force.

Mr. Stanley: The reintroduction of a flying role for the Royal Auxiliary Air Force is still under consideration. Account will have to be taken of its relative priority against other demands on defence resources.

Exercise Brave Defender 1985

Mr. D. E. Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give information on the United Kingdom's contribution to Exercise Brave Defender 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Stanley: Brave Defender is a national military home defence exercise to test plans for the ground defence of vital installations in the United Kingdom in conventional war.

General Belgrano

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 11 December, Official Report, column 432-3, on how many occasions Northwood received reports from HMS Conqueror on the course and position of the General Belgrano; at what time these reports were received; and if all these reports have been retained and are available to him.

Mr. Stanley: I have nothing to add to the reply given to the hon. Gentleman by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State on 18 December at column 101.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Pym asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether it is his intention to commemorate in the United Kingdom those who died in the Falklands conflict.

Mr. Heseltine: A South Atlantic campaign memorial, bearing the names of all those who lost their lives, is to be erected, with the agreement of the Dean and Chapter of St. Paul's, in the crypt of the cathedral, in a suitable place close to other military memorials there. Work will commence shortly and the memorial will be unveiled next summer.

Her Majesty the Queen has graciously accepted an invitation to unveil the memorial during a commemorative service in the cathedral, to which the next of kin of those who died will be invited.

Royal Ordnance plc

Mr. Eggar asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he is now in a position to announce the timing of vesting day for Royal Ordnance plc.

Mr. Butler: Vesting day will be 2 January 1985. On that day, a scheme will come into effect pursuant to section 1 of the Ordnance Factories and Military Services Act 1984 which will transfer assets and liabilities of the ROF trading fund and certain other establishments to the Royal Ordnance plc. The existing shares in the company have all been transferred to the ownership of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Defence. A copy of the scheme will be laid before Parliament as soon as the House re-convenes after the recess.

Trident

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many jobs will be provided by the United Kingdom purchase of Trident missiles; and how many of these will be in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Butler: Fifty five per cent. of the estimated cost of Trident at £8,729 million is expected to be spent in Britain. As my hon. Friend the Minister of State for Defence Procurement told the hon. Member for Colchester, North (Sir A. Buck) on 24 July at column 602, the Trident programme is expected to create an extra 18,000 job opportunities directly and 14,000 indirectly in the United Kingdom during the peak years of the project. No information is available on job opportunities created by the dollar expenditure, including that on the missiles. However, a number of United Kingdom companies are competing for work on the American Trident II programme, with the potential for further jobs being created in the United Kingdom.

Military Equipment (Tempest Testing)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give, for each of the last five years (a) the total numbers of separate pieces of equipment tested by his Department for compliance with the Tempest North Atlantic Treaty Organisation standard specification for military terminals, (b) the total number of pieces of equipment found acceptable as being up to the Tempest standard, and (c) the average length of time taken between submission of equipment for Tempest testing and the issuing of a Tempest certificate.

Mr. Butler: The Ministry of Defence is not responsible for testing equipments for compliance with the NATO standard and specification for Tempest protection of military terminals.

RAF (New Basic Trainer)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has received any firm offers or orders for British-made equipment from any potential suppliers of the Royal Air Force's new basic trainer.

Mr. Butler: The four tenders for the future Royal Air Force basic trainer were received from British firms, three of which had made arrangements with foreign companies to manufacture aircraft designed by them. None of the countries involved have made firm orders for British-made equipment which specifically relate to the competition for the new trainer.

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Defence if it has been proposed that the Shorts Tucano basic trainer will be British-built under licence to Royal Air Force requirements rather than an exact replica of a Brazilian aircraft.

Mr. Butler: Yes.

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Defence if the original specifications for the Royal Air Force basic trainer which companies were required to meet remain valid.

Mr. Butler: Yes.

Departmental Police

Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has it in mind to review the future role of his Department's police.

Mr. Butler: Yes. My right hon. Friend has decided to set up a high level independent committee to review the role, composition and size of the Ministry of Defence police in the context of current policy and administration of the physical security of Ministry of Defence establishments in the United Kingdom. The chairman will be Sir Ewen Broadbent, formerly second permanent under-secretary of State, Ministry of Defence, and the members Major-General D. C. Alexander, commandant of the Scottish police college, and Sir Peter Matthews, formerly Chief Constable of Surrey.

Nuclear Tests (Radiation)

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) whether he will publish or make available a list of the names, service, service numbers and ranks of those service personnel involved in the series of nuclear tests carried out between 3 October 1952 and 23 September 1958 who constitute part of the present study by the National Radiological Protection Board.

(2) if he will publish or make available a list of the names, service, service number and ranks of those service personnel who were involved in incurring additional risks in the series of nuclear tests carried out between 3 October 1952 and 23 September 1958; and if he will give details of the planned special exposure level of radiation incurred by these individuals;

(3) if the records of the dosages of radiation incurred by the service personnel involved in the nuclear tests carried out between 3 October 1952 and 23 September 1958, inclusive, will be made available to the National Radiological Protection Board; and if the original dosimeters and personnel film badges will also be made available to the National Radiological Protection Board;

(4) if he will give details of the appropriate protection provided to the service personnel involved in the series of nuclear tests carried out between 3 October 1952 and 23 September 1958.

Mr. Butler: I will answer shortly.

HMS Conqueror

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will specify the precise time, stating whether it is London or local time at which Admiral Woodward learned of the visual contact which HMS Conqueror had established with the Belgrano.

Mr. Stanley: I have nothing to add to my reply to the hon. Gentlaman of 14 December at column 618.

Over-the-horizon Radar System

Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State Defence if he will make a statement on the United States' military plans to install an over-the-horizon radar system in England and Scotland.

Mr. Butler [pursuant to the reply, 19 December 1984, c. 206]: The United Kingdom and United States are collaborating in a joint programme of studies aimed at testing the feasibility of siting an over-the-horizon radar system in the United Kingdom. These studies are at a very early stage and there are at present no firm plans for implementation.

Joint Radar Project

Mr. Donald Stewart asked the Secretary of State for Defence (1) what is the status and purpose of the joint radar project with the United States of America known as Cold Witness;

(2) what is the status of the joint programme with the United States of America to install an over-the-horizon radar in England; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butler [pursuant to the reply, 3 December 1984, c. 50]: The United Kingdom and United States are collaborating in a joint programme of studies aimed at testing the feasibility of siting an over-the-horizon radar system in the United Kingdom. These studies are at a very early stage and there are at present no firm plans for implementation. The project is no longer called Cold Witness.

TRANSPORT

Buses (Deregulation)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Transport what recommendations he intends to issue to ensure that the provision of transport arranged for the purpose of taking school pupils in rural areas to and from their homes is maintained in the event of deregulation.

Mr. David Mitchell: The Government have no plans to amend the existing law governing the duty to provide transport for school pupils.

National Bus Company

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Transport what provisions will be made to enable the National Bus Company to meet the expected shortfall in spending on socially necessary routes even if the full initial £20 million transitional grant proposed in the White Paper on deregulation is allocated.

Mr. David Mitchell: Rural bus grant will be only one of the sources of finance for the many operators of rural services. This grant, up to £20 million in the first year, will be distributed direct to operators by the Department of Transport. It is in addition to the continuing, and substantial, sums of money paid by local authorities to maintain rural services. Under the Government's proposals authorities will be able to obtain better value for money through competitive tendering. The NBC will have full opportunity to participate in the tendering process.

British Rail (Resources)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Transport what resources he intends to make available to British Rail to enable it to provide suitable replacements of services or routes withdrawn from its network.

Mr. David Mitchell: In dealing with any proposal for the withdrawal of a rail passenger service, we propose that it should be open to British Rail, the TUCC and my right hon. Friend to propose or require the provisions of a guaranteed and—where necessary—subsidised substitute bus service. Where consent to withdrawal of the rail service was given, the substitute bus service could be subsidised through the Government's grant to British Rail for its passenger service.

Electrified Railway Line

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Transport what has been the total mileage of electrified railway line on inter-city routes in each of the years since 1954.

Mr. David Mitchell: In 1979 British Rail had 2310 route miles (6107 track miles) of electrified railway. Electric services from London to Bedford began in 1983, adding 54 route miles and 225 track miles.

Electrification of a further 617 route miles (1533 track miles) has been approved since 1981. Work will be completed between 1985 and 1991.

Separate figures are not readily available for Inter-City routes or for earlier years.

Redundancies (British Rail)

Mr. Sackville asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many (a) compulsory and (b) voluntary redundancies there were of British Rail employees in the months October, November and December 1983.

Mr. David Mitchell: British Rail is not able to provide the information in the form requested. However, I understand that in the last 15 weeks of 1983 (19 September to 31 December) 3,092 British Rail staff left on voluntary redundancy terms, including 1,488 from British Rail Engineering Limited. There were no compulsory redundancies.

Soviet Vessels (British Ports)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Transport if the Government have any plans to ban Soviet merchant or passenger ships from British ports.

Mr. David Mitchell: I will write to the hon. Member.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Self-help and Community Groups

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will list the self-help or community groups in Northern Ireland which are receiving public funding and the amount of financial assistance given to each over the last five years for which records are available;

(2) if each self-help or community group receiving public funding is subject to supervision by Government officials; and if reports are available on the achievements of self-help or community groups indicating the value for money which has been allocated to date;

(3) if financial assistance will continue to be made to self-help or community groups in future.

Dr. Boyson: Information needed to list self help or community groups and their funding is not readily available and could only be obtained at disproportionate cost. The degree of supervision of these groups varies depending on the purpose for which funds are made available, the nature and experience of the groups involved and the extent of the funding. Groups provide annual reports where appropriate. Financial assistance will continue to be given to self-help and community groups.

Vehicle Repair Businesses

Mr. Beggs asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will list by name and address all businesses engaged in motor accident body repair and respraying which are paying rates in the constituency of East Antrim.

Dr. Boyson: This information is not available.

Murder Statistics

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many murders have been committed in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years; and how many of these have been carried out by (a) Republican terrorist groups and (b) Loyalist paramilitaries.

Mr. Scott: The total number of murders committed in Northern Ireland since 1 January 1980 and the numbers of these for which terrorists are believed to have been responsible are as follows:

Year	Total	Attributed to:
		Republicans	Loyalists
1980	85	53	13
1981	95	69	12
1982	99	71	13
1983	86	54	7
1984*	60	40	8

* Up to 16 December

Student Grants

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) how many students in higher education in each of the five education and library boards are presently receiving the minimum grant;

(2) how much he estimates will be saved by the abolition of the minimum grant to students in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Scott: The number of students holding minimum awards is as follows:

Education and Library Board	Number
North-Eastern	521
South-Eastern	749
Western	336
Belfast	538
Southern	69
Total	2,213

In addition, 98 students are in receipt of minimum awards from the Department of Education for Northern Ireland.

On the basis of there being approximately 2,300 minimum awards, abolition would save some £0·5 million per annum; if the changes in parental contribution rates recently announced for England and Wales were also applied, the overall savings would be about £0·2 million.

Norah McCabe (RUC Officers)

Miss Maynard asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many of the officers of the Royal Ulster Constabulary who were involved in the incident in which Norah McCabe was shot are still on active police duty; and, of these, how many have been promoted and to what ranks.

Mr. Hurd: The 11 police officers involved in the patrol are still serving in the Royal Ulster Constabulary. Three have since been promoted: One to assistant chief constable, one to chief inspector and one to sergeant.

Extradition

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many extradition requests made in respect of people living in the Irish Republic and wanted for questioning regarding involvement in terrorist crimes in the United Kingdom have been turned down by the courts in the Irish Republic since 1970 to the latest available date.

Mr. Scott: 49 to 14 December 1984.

Strip Searches

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on his policy for strip-searching prisoners at Her Majesty's prison, Armagh.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 19 December 1984, c. 217]: Strip searches are a necessary part of maintaining prison security. The procedures used in Northern Ireland are the same as those which have been used for many years in comparable prisons in Great Britain and elsewhere. The need for and frequency of searches are kept under close review. I am satisfied that the present level is kept to the necessary minimum. This is borne out by the statistics. For example, in the last three months, since 1 September, there have been two strip searches a month of women remand prisoners attending Armagh court house.

Prisoners (Statistics)

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement listing all prisoners in Northern Ireland currently remanded in custody detailing where they are held, how long they have been on remand, what charges they face, whether they have served any previous periods on remand and the charges that face them, whether they have served any previous periods in prison and the number of court appearances they have made in respect of the charges on which they are remanded.

Mr. Scott [pursuant to his reply, 19 December 1984, c. 217]: It would not be appropriate to publish all the information requested in respect of named individuals and some could only be provided at disproportionate costs.

Salmon

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will publish a table in the Official Report to show how many salmon and grilse passed through the salmon trap on the river bank at Bushmills in each month in each year since 1973, the total for each year, the number of fish taken and sold by the Department of Agriculture in each year, the sums realised from any such sales annually and the average size of the salmon and grilse ascending the river in each year.

Dr. Boyson [pursuant to his reply, 18 December 1984, c. 209-210]:

Republic of Ireland (Citizens)

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many citizens of the Irish Republic are presently living in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Waddington: I have been asked to reply.

It is estimated from the labour force survey that there were about half a million citizens of the Irish Republic living in the United Kingdom in the second quarter of 1983. This estimate includes some persons who hold dual British/Irish citizenship. Further information on Irish citizens living in Great Britain is given in table 12 of the Office of Population Censuses and Surveys' monitor "Labour Force Survey 1983: country of birth, ethnic origin, nationality and year of entry" (reference LFS 84/2).

EMPLOYMENT

Skillcentres (Closure)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Employment what proportion of the 950 staff employed within the 29 skillcentres to be closed by the Manpower Services Commission by 1986 will receive redundancy payments; and what payments will be made.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Manpower Services Commission has not yet taken a decision on the proposals made to it by the skillcentre training agency. It is too early to predict how many of the 1,050 staff who would be affected if the proposals were agreed might have to be declared redundant or, for those in the instructor group, be compulsorily retired at age 60 and over. Every effort would be made to redeploy those affected and to effect the reductions with as little hardship to individuals as possible. Levels of redundancy payment are determined by the provisions of the principal civil service pension scheme. These are summarised in the guide "Civil Service Pensions Explained" (2nd edition) a copy of which is in the library of the House. Individual entitlement would vary considerably.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the number of jobs which will be lost resulting from the proposed closure of the skillcentres at Castle Bromwich, Kirkby-in-Ashfield, Long Eaton, Redditch, the young persons' training centre at Handsworth, Birmingham, and the Wolverhampton annexe at Dudley.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Manpower Services Commission has not yet taken a decision on the proposals made to it by the skillcentre training agency. 205 people are currently employed at the skillcentres in Castle Bromwich, Kirkby-in-Ashfield, Long Eaton and Redditch, the young persons' training centre in Handsworth and the Wolverhampton skillcentre annexe in Dudley.

Whilst jobs at these centres would go if the proposals were agreed some jobs would be gained in the skillcentres remaining in the proposed network and in the expanded mobile instructor service. It is not possible at this stage to determine the net effect on jobs of these proposed closures, though nationally there would be a loss of about 950 jobs.

The impact of the proposals on the 205 individual members of staff at these centres would depend on redeployment measures and on the nature of any retirement or redundancy arrangements yet to be agreed and implemented.

Labour and Social Affairs Council

Mr. Silvester asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the European Community Labour and Social Affairs Council held in Brussels on 13 December.

Mr. Tom King: I, together with my hon. Friend the Parliamentary Under-Secretary for Health and Social Security, represented the United Kingdom.

The Council reached agreement on five proposals. The resolution on long-term unemployment makes sensible and realistic suggestions about action to be taken by the Community and member states, while recognising that the problem cannot be resolved without policies designed to achieve economic recovery. I welcome the emphasis on the need to increase flexibility in the labour market and on the role of employment and training measures such as the community programme.

The second EC programme to combat poverty will enable us to try out new approaches to problems which we share with other member states and will involve co-operation with the voluntary sector. The Council also agreed a third programme for the exchange of young workers and a recommendation on positive action for women which is very much in accordance with Government policy and adopted a regulation for a labour force survey in 1985.

There was a short debate on the report of the ad hoc working group on the draft "Vredeling" directive. I welcome the report, which has brought to the surface many of the United Kingdom's concerns about the proposals and identifies the number of issues which require detailed discussion, in particular a new approach based on giving employee a right to be given information. I was encouraged to note that a number of other member states appear to share at least some of our concerns.

It was the general view that the Vredeling draft does not provide a suitable basis for agreement. The alternative approach to employees information and involvement was discussed and this will be further explored. While I maintained our general reserve of principle on whether the legislative rather than the voluntary approach was the way to proceed, I agreed that we would take part in further discussions.

The Council reviewed progress on the draft directive on the protection of workers against industrial noise, a matter on which I would welcome early action by the Community. There was a general wish that the Council should agree the directive during the forthcoming Italian Presidency.

The Council ended with a discussion on statistical machinery to establish priority for assistance to regions from the European social fund. I welcome Commissioner Richard's statement that if the Council is unable to reach a concensus on this issue, the Commission will introduce statistical machinery within the framework of the fund guidelines.

EEC (Prices and Costs)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish a table showing for the last eight six-monthly periods for which figures are available, for each member state of the European Economic Community and for the European Economic Community as a whole, the index of producer prices, index of unit labour costs, index of import price competitiveness, increase in real unit labour costs and increase in non-wage labour costs.

Mr. Alan Clark: The available information on unit labour costs, estimated by the European Commission, relates to annual rather than six-monthly periods and is given in the following table. The indices of producer prices and of import price competitiveness are matters for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry. Comparable information on non-wage labour costs for European Community countries is only available from the triennial survey of labour costs, for which the latest results relate to 1981 and were published by Eurostat in 1984. More recent estimates for Great Britain were given in an article in the August 1984 Employment Gazette. Copies of both of these publications are available in the Library.

Chapelcross Nuclear Power Station (Radiation)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make a statement on the levels of radiation among workers at Chapelcross nuclear power station; and what steps he is taking to reduce them.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: The radiation dose levels at Chapelcross reflect the fact that this is one of the earliest nuclear power stations built in this country. The Nuclear Installations Inspectorate is satisfied that the doses received by workers on the site are well within annual limits and are acceptable. The licensee is required by a condition of the nuclear site licence to take all reasonable steps to minimise exposure to persons on the site.

Construction Industry Training Board

Mr. John Mark Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Employment (1) if he has plans to abolish the Construction Industry Training Board; and if he will make a statement;

(2) what representations he has received advocating the abolition of the Construction Industry Training Board since June 1983; what response he has made; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: My right hon. Friend and I have received a small number of representations in the past 18 months about the future of the Construction Industry Training Board.

We have pointed out in our responses that employer organisations in the industry expressed strong support for the retention of the board during the Government's review of industrial training in 1981, and that they remain convinced of the need for statutory arrangements in the industry.

Under the Industrial Training Act 1982, employers have a greater say in the running of boards. My right hon. Friend and I have consistently stressed to board chairmen the need to ensure companies receive value for money. The Construction Industry Training Board plays an important role in the Government's overall training plans and has been particularly successful in managing a youth training scheme. The Government have no plans to abolish the board.

Factory Closures and Redundancies (Merseyside)

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Employment what was the number of (a) factory closures and (b) redundancies in each year since 1979 (i) on Merseyside, (ii) in Kirkby and (iii) in Prescot.

Mr. Alan Clark: The available information is given in the following table.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Consular Offices

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will list those consular offices which, as he announced on 25 November, Official Report, column 426, would be closed shortly.

Mr. Renton: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. and learned Friend gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Hertford and Stortford (Mr. Wells) on 18 December at column 137.

Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs why he is proposing to close the British consular office in Thessaloniki.

Mr. Renton: The consulate in Salonika is to be closed as part of the package of measures announced on 22 November which was designed to ensure that Foreign and Commonwealth Office expenditure in 1985-86 remains within the provision already approved by Parliament. We regret that our support for exporters will not be as comprehensive as in the past. An honorary consul will be appointed who will be able to provide useful contracts with local authorities, commerce and industry.

Wild Birds

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the European Community directive in the conservation of wild birds (79/409) will apply to the Canary Islands, Madeira, the Azores and the Chafarine; and if these island groups will be defined as being part of the European territory of Spain and Portugal.

Mr. Rifkind: The European Economic Community directive on the conservation of wild birds will aplly to Madeira and the Azores and to Ceuta and Melilla (with which the Chafarine Islands are associated) by virtue of the terms of Spanish and Portuguese accession to the Community. Negotiations are still in progress on the status of the Canary Islands.

Plutonium (Military Use)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will instruct Her Majesty's ambassador to the United States to seek to obtain a copy of the recent statement to Congress by the United States Energy Secretary concerning the requirements of the mutual defense agreement in respect of plutonium supplies to the United States by the United Kingdom.

Mr. Luce: Her Majesty's ambassador to the United States has forwarded a copy of the report to Congress of 17 May 1984 by Mr. Dingell of the Committee on Energy and Commerce. The ambassador keeps my right hon. and learned Friend fully informed on such questions.

Namibia

Sir Dudley Smith asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if, in view of the position on questions relating to Namibia of the United Kingdom as a contact group member, he will withdraw United Kingdom funding from all United Nations agencies which allocate funds to SWAPO; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: The United Kingdom has an obligation under the United Nations Charter to contribute to the regular budget of the United Nations, whatever expenditures this may cover. We have a similar obligation to contribute to the assessed budgets of the United Nations specialised agencies of which we are a member. Membership of the contact group does not affect those obligations. However, in common with our partners in the contact group, we have consistently abstained on United Nations General Assembly resolutions authorising explicit provision of financial assistance to SWAPO through any United Nations body.

Non-proliferation Treaty

Mr. Sayeed asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what Her Majesty's Government intend to do about the renewal of the non-proliferation treaty in August/September 1985; and if they intend to propose any changes.

Mr. Luce: The object of next year's non-proliferation treaty review conference is "to review the operation of this Treaty with a view to assuring that the purposes of the Preamble and the provisions of the Treaty are being realised", in accordance with article VIII (3). The question of renewing the treaty does not arise until 1995, as provided for in article X(2). Our policy towards the 1985 review conference was explained in my answer of 17 December to my hon. Friend the Member for Ynys Mon (Mr. Best) at column 30.

Extradition

Mr. Sayeed asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs with what countries the United Kingdom does not have an extradition treaty.

Mr. Renton: I would refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Cardiff, West (Mr. Terlezki) on 27 November at column 450-1.

SCOTLAND

Woodland (Sales)

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many acres of woodland have been sold by the Forestry Commission during each of the past five financial years; what have been the annual receipts from such sales; and what are the estimated total sales and receipts for 1984-85 and 1985-86.

Mr. John MacKay: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Tourist Board (Budget)

Mr. Wilson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what is the budget of the Scottish Tourist Board in the present financial year; and what were the figures for the previous three financial years.

Mr. Younger: The information is given in the following table:

Year	£ million
1981-82	6·1
1982-83	7·6
1983-84	7·9
1984-85	9·2

Provision for each year comprises a general grant-in-aid and an allocation of funds for assistance to tourist projects under section 4 of the Development of Tourism Act 1969.

Youth Training Scheme (Dundee)

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish the name and number of managing agents under the youth training scheme in Dundee, the number on each scheme and the fees being paid to managing agents in total.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The names of the 73 managing agents operating in Dundee, including those which are organised on a GB or all-Scotland basis, and details of the numbers of youngsters currently in training are:

Museums and Galleries (Purchase Grants)

Mr. Faulds asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to announce the individual amounts for purchase grants to be allocated to the national museums and galleries in Scotland for the year 1985-86.

Mr. Allan Stewart: My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland announced on 20 December the overall provision for the Scottish national institutions in 1985-86, subject as usual to Parliamentary approval. The individual purchase grant allocations for 1985-86 are as follows:

National Galleries of Scotland	1,439,000
National Museum of Antiquities of Scotland	194,000
Royal Scottish Museum	397,000
National Library of Scotland	665,000

Local Museum Purchase Fund (Science)	27,000

Orkney and Shetland (Regional Aid)

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many non oil-related projects in (a) Orkney and (b) Shetland were given regional selective assistance; and what was the total value of such assistance between August 1980 and November 1984.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Between August 1980 and November 1984 no regional selective assistance was given under the Industry Act 1972 and the Industrial Development Act 1982 to any non oil-related project in either Orkney or Shetland. The Highlands and Islands Development Board has, however, under section 8 of the Highlands and Islands Development (Scotland) Act 1965, provided financial assistance amounting to £6,576,845 to non oil-related projects in Orkney and £5,542,203 to non oil-related projects in Shetland between August 1980 and November 1984. Figures on the number of non oil-related projects assisted by HIDB for the period in question are however not available.

Assisted Places Scheme (Minister's Correspondence)

Mr. Ernie Ross asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the text of the letter from the Scottish Education Minister to the hon. Member for Dundee, West on 6 December regarding the latest allocation of assisted places in Scotland.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The text of my letter is as follows:

Ernie Ross Esq MP
House of Commons
London
SW1A OAA

6 December 1984

You will recall that the Secretary of State was unable to reply fully to 3 Parliamentary Questions about the Assisted Places Scheme, which you tabled towards the end of the last session. The interim replies were published on 23 and 25 October, (Official Reports, Vol 65, No 207, Written Answers Col 546 and Vol 65, No 209, Written Answers Col 675) but statistics for the current school session did not become available in time for publication in Hansard before the Prorogation.
Hence this letter.

You asked the Secretary of State—

1. What has been the number and percentage of places awarded under the assisted places scheme to pupils already attending grant-aided or independent schools in the latest school session in Scotland; and what are the corresponding figures for each participating school;

2. If he will publish in the Official Report a table concerning the assisted places scheme for each participating school showing (a) the number of places made available, (b) the number of applications for places and (c) the number and percentage of applications from parents for children already attending a fee-paying school and the corresponding information for Scotland in total; and

3. What is the current number and percentage of places at schools participating in the assisted places scheme expressed in terms of the school roll in each case.

You will recall from the Secretary of State's earlier reply that the information which you required in Parts (b) and (c) of the second Question is not collected centrally. The information now available in reply to all 3 Questions is in the enclosed tables.

Allan Stewart

International Year of Youth

Mr. Craigen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what financial support will be given to assisting activities under the International Year of Youth 1985.

Mr. Allan Stewart: Grants given to the national co-ordinating committee for Scotland for the period 1 April 1983 to 31 March 1985 amount to £34,794. the financial support to be given for the year 1985-86 has not yet been determined.

Regional Development Grant

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how much has been paid out in regional development grants for (a) oil related projects and (b) other projects in the Kirkcaldy and Dunfermline travel-to-work areas in each year since 1979; and how many companies have benefited.

Mr. Allan Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 17 December 1984, c. 25-6.]: I regret that the information requested is not available. Statistics relating to regional development grant paid before 29 November 1984 are only available for payments of £25,000 or more and these amounts have been published in British Business under employment office areas (EOA's) rather than travel-to-work areas (TTWA's). The present TTWA's of Dunfermline and Kirkcaldy comprise the former EOA's of Cowdenbeath, Glenrothes, Glenrothes New Town, Kirkcaldy and Leven and Methil, but part of Leven and Methil ceased to be a development area on 1 August 1980. The table shows the totals of regional development grants over £25,000 paid in each year since 1979 in these EOA's, split between grants paid to oil related industries and to other industries. The grants were paid to 87 companies.

ENVIRONMENT

Council House Sales

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish a table showing, for England, the gross receipts from sales of council homes under the right-to-buy policy, for the years 1979-80 to the latest available year.

Sir George Young: Amounts of initial capital receipts from all sales of council houses by English local authority and new towns since 1979-80 are set out as follows. No separate information is available for sales under the right to buy.

	£ million
1979-80	126·3
1980-81	193·4
1981-82	548·0
1982-83	1,046·0
1983-84*	1,023·0

* Provisional.

Agricultural Buildings (Rating)

Mr. Cartwright asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he has any plans to reintroduce rating of agricultural buildings.

Mr. Waldegrave: No.

Rents

Mr. Frank Field asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the average percentage increase in rents of local authority housing which is being proposed for the coming year; and if he will list the percentage increases being proposed by Wirral metropolitan district.

Sir George Young: I refer to the answer given to my hon. Friend on 18 December to my hon. Friend the Member for Staffordshire, South-East (Mr. Lightbown) at column 92. It is for individual authorities to decide their own rent increases.

Endangered Species

Dr. Cunningham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what advice he has received from the Scientific Authority for Animals concerning the proposed cessation of the production of annual reports detailing the trade in animals and their products between the member states of the European Community which are controlled by the convention on international trade in endangered species of wild fauna and flora; and when he received such advice.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: The Nature Conservancy Council, as the scientific authority for animals, has not offered me advice on the matter stated in the question. However, the NCC has supported the arrangements which my Department have made in liaison with HM Customs and Excise to maintain close checks on live animals and products of endangered species entering the United Kingdom from either EC or non-EC countries. The results are reassuring.

Metropolitan County Councils (Legal Responsibilities)

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the Acts and regulations which have come into force since April 1974, the enforcement of which has fallen upon the metropolitan county councils.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I shall write to the hon. Member.

Departmental Staff (Salaries)

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of his staff based at Marsham street have salaries in excess of £20,000 per annum; and what percentage of the total salary bill for that office that forms.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: For the headquarters offices in Marsham street the figures are some 7·5 per cent. and 18 per cent. respectively.

Regional Water Authorities (Staff Salaries)

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what percentage of staff employed by regional water authorities earn in excess of £20,000 per annum.

Mr. Macfarlane: Based on salaries with effect from 1 July 1984 and employee numbers at 1 April 1984, the Water Authorities Association calculates that 1·4 per cent. of all employees of regional water authorities earn basic salaries above £20,000 per annum.

West Yorkshire Metropolitan County Council

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the percentage change in the numbers of people employed by West Yorkshire metropolitan county council in the latest year for which he has figures available compared to 1974-75, excluding uniformed police and fire service personnel and probation and after-care officers.

Mr. Waldegrave: The available information is as follows:

West Yorkshire metropolitan county council—change in number of employees June 1979 to June 1984

	Number	per cent.
Full-time employees	−299	−6·5
Part-time employees	−54	−5·4
Total employees	−353	−6·3

Note: These figures exclude uniformed police, cadets, traffic wardens, police civilians, fire service personnel, the staff of magistrates courts, and probation and aftercare staff.

Manpower figures relating to individual authorities for periods as long ago as 1974-75 are not held centrally.

Housing Stock

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give a breakdown by region of the percentage of the housing stock which is (a) owner-occupied, (b) privately-rented and (c) rented from a local authority or new town and compare these figures with those of 10 years previously.

Sir George Young: A comparison of this kind was published in table 3.3 of "Regional Trends 1984" for the years 1972 and 1982. 1983 estimates of the tenure of stock in each region were published in table 9.4 of "Housing and Construction Statistics 1973-1983". Copies of these publications are in the Library.

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what information he has concerning the percentage of the total housing stock in the United Kingdom, in England, and in the north west which is (a) needing repairs but not unfit for habitation, (b) unfit for habitation but not in serious disrepair and (c) unfit for habitation and in serious disrepair; and how these figures compare with those of five years previously.

Sir George Young: Estimates based on local authority housing investment programme returns for 1984 and the earliest year (1980) for which comparable information was collected are as follows:

	England		North West
	1980	1984	1980	*1984
	per cent.	per cent.	per cent.	per cent.

* Including Cumbria.

† Defined as needing more than £2,000 expenditure (£3,000 in Greater London) for 1980 and more than £3,000 (£4,200 in Greater London) for 1984.

Information on the relationship between repair costs and unfitness is contained in the part I of the report of the English House Conditions Survey 1981. A copy is in the Library. Similar information for the United Kingdom is not available.

Housing Renovations

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give a breakdown by region of the number of dwellings renovated with the aid of grant subsidy by (a) local authorities and new towns, (b) housing associations and (c) private owners and tenants in each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Sir George Young: Regional figures of renovations for 1973 to 1982, together with provisional figures for 1983, were published in table 7.2 of 'Housing and Construction Statistics 1973-1983'. Final figures for 1983 were published in table 2.15 of 'Housing and Construction Statistics Part 2, No. 18'. Copies of these publications are available in the Library.

Mains Water and Sewerage

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give a breakdown by region of the percentage of domestic dwellings supplied by (a) mains water and (b) mains sewerage in each of the last 10 years.

Sir George Young: The available information relates to the percentage of the population in each water authority area in England and Wales where these services were supplied.

Royal Parks

Mr. Tony Banks asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to transfer the royal parks in London to the London boroughs.

Mr. Macfarlane: No.

Rate Support Grant (Hertfordshire)

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from Hertfordshire county council regarding the rate support grant settlement for 1985-86; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: My right hon. Friend received several representations from the county council, which he considered before announcing the rate support grant settlement for 1985-86 on 11 December. The settlement includes a particular change, advocated by the council, in the method of allowing for the Metropolitan police precept in parts of the Metropolitan police district outside Greater London.

Rate Support Grant (Welwyn Hatfield)

Mr. Murphy asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received from Welwyn Hatfield district council regarding the rate support grant settlement for 1985-86; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: I met members of the council in July, when they expressed views on various aspects of the rate support grant system, which my right hon. Friend considered carefully before announcing the settlement on 11 December. The settlement includes some of the suggestions advocated by the council.

Metropolitan County Councils (Abolition)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give a breakdown of the 900 new posts which will be created in the bodies which will take over certain functions currently performed by the Greater London council and metropolitan county councils after their proposed abolition; which specific bodies will be accommodating these new posts; and what will be the range of their levels of pay.

Sir George Young: The figure of 900 given in the explanatory and financial memorandum to the Local Government Bill derives from an estimate of the present number of posts in the services that are to be transferred to non-departmental bodies, ie the Arts Council, the Historic Buildings and Monuments Commission, the Thames water authority, and a trustee body to be set up for Merseyside museums and art galleries. It will, in general, be for those bodies to determine in due course the precise numbers, grades and pay of the staff they take on.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Fourth Generation Computer Languages

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether he will consider a Government-backed scheme to encourage the use of fourth generation computer languages, similar to the National Computing Centre-administered start scheme for real time software.

Mr. Butcher: The initiative to encourage software tools for application to large real-time systems (STARTS) was launched by the Department earlier this year since real-time software is recognised to be complex and in need of development methods and tools. An essential part of the initiative to stimulate suppliers to adopt improved software methods has been the setting up of the STARTS public purchasers' group whose primary interests are in large real-time systems. It does not involve direct Departmental assistance to either suppliers or users.

The Department has no plans at present to launch a similar initiative for other types of software. However many of the tools relevant to real-time systems are applicable also to the management of any large software project, hence STARTS will have relevance for a range of software users. Fourth-generation languages may need to be considered within this context though their application tends to be primarily related to more straightforward data-processing applications.

Projects aimed at developing specific 'fourth-generation languages' have received assistance from the Department's software products scheme, which is also administered by the NCC. Under this scheme costs of marketing the products are eligible for assistance.

The hon. Members' suggestion will be considered within the review of support for innovation that is taking place during the current moratorium on such assistance.

Vauxhall Cars (UK Content)

Mr. Roger King asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will seek further discussions with Vauxhall Motors Ltd, with a view to increasing the United Kingdom content of Vauxhall cars.

Mr. Butcher: I should very much welcome a higher level of British content in the cars produced in the United Kingdom by Vauxhall Motors and increased sales by United Kingdom suppliers to General Motors' operations elsewhere in Europe. This is the subject of discussions between my Department and the company.

Royal Princess Liner

Mr. Wigley asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry whether any public funds have been made available either by way of grant or loan towards the building of the liner Royal Princess.

Mr. Butcher: No.

US (Aircraft Exports)

Mr. Hill asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what steps he is taking to assist British exporters in those parts of the United States civilian and military aircraft market which are at present closed to European imports.

Mr. Channon: The European Community and the United States enjoy open access to each others civil aircraft market under the terms of the GATT agreement on trade in civil aircraft, to which both are signatories. British industry receives considerable support from the Ministry of Defence in marketing defence products in the United States, and, under the umbrella of the 1975 United States/United Kingdom memorandum of understanding relating to the principles governing co-operation in research and development production and procurement of defence equipment. British aircraft manufacturers have in 1984 obtained significant contracts from both the United States air force and navy.

Christmas Cards (Non-charitable Organisations)

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce legislation making it a criminal offence for non-charitable organisations to post Christmas cards and subsequently to seek payment for them with the implication that the money raised will go to charity when in reality it is retained by those companies.

Mr. Fletcher: No. There is already legislation to protect individuals who are sent unsolicited goods. Under the Unsolicited Goods and Services Act 1971, the recipients are under no obligation to pay for such items or to return them.

Loan Guarantee and Business Expansion Schemes

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the failure rate for firms which have received assistance under the loan guarantee scheme and the business expansion scheme.

Mr. Trippier: I will reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

EC (Trade Statistics)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will publish a table showing for the last eight six-monthly periods for which figures are available, for each member state of the European Economic Community and for the European Community as a whole, the level of exports to other European Economic Community member states, level of exports to outside the European Economic Community, level of imports from other European Economic Community states and level of imports from outside the European Economic Community.

Mr. Channon: Data up to March 1984, the most recent date for which information for all the Community countries is readily available, are in the tables.

Industrial Capacity

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) if he will make a statement on the current level of capacity utilisation in industry within the member states of the EEC and the EEC as a whole;

(2) if he will make a statement on the level of productive potential in EEC member states and within the EEC as a whole.

Mr. Channon [pursuant to the reply, 20 December 1984 c. 273]: Data on productive potential in the Community are not readily available. Information on production capacity and untilization are given regularly in "Results of the business survey carried out among managements in the Community" published by the European Community Commission (Directorate-General for Economic and Financial Affairs). The results of the latest survey are in table O of th October 1984 edition. A copy of this publication is in the Library.

PRIME MINISTER

Mr. Victor Paige (Responsibilities)

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the the Prime Minister whether the responsibilities of Mr. Paige, chairman of the Health Service management board, are limited to the National Health Service in England; and what provision has been made for the implementation of the Griffiths Report in Northern Ireland, Scotland and Wales.

Mr. Fowler: I have been asked to reply.

Mr. Paige's responsibilities, like my own with regard to the National Health Service, are indeed limited to England.

The implementation of the Griffiths report in Northern Ireland, Scotland and Wales is the responsibility of my right hon. Friends the Secretaries of State for those countries. I understand, however, that the position is as follows.

In Northern Ireland it is not proposed to appoint a general manager of the health and personal social services and the permanent secretary of the Department of Health and Social Services will continue to fulfill his current responsibilities for the management of the services as accounting officer. A review of the top structure of the Department is underway with the objective of establishing a framework which will assist in the exercise of those responsibilities. On 12 December the Department published a circular which requires health and social services boards to appoint, by 1 April 1985, general managers at area level.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland issued a consultative paper in June 1984 on the introduction of the general management function in Scotland. In August, a new under-secretary post was created in the Scottish Home and Health Department with responsibility for National Health Service management, finance and operational planning.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Wales has accepted that the principles of the inquiry team's report apply equally to the National Health Service in Wales, and he has taken action to strengthen the general management function at all levels of the service. Details are set out in Welsh Office circular WHC(84)15, a copy of which is in the Library.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Pensions and Annuities

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what is the lump sum that would currently be required to purchase for a woman at 60 years of age a life annuity, to be uprated together with the retail price index and secured on Government indexed stock, of equivalent value to a single woman's retirement pension;

(2) what is the lump sum that would currently be required to purchase for a man at 65 years of age a life annuity, to be uprated together with the retail price index and secured on Government indexed stock, of equivalent value to a married man's national insurance retirement pension.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that the Department does not keep details of commercial annuity rates, nor am I in a position to confirm that annuities of the type described in the question are in fact available.

National Insurance Pensions

Sir Brandon Rhys Williams asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the incomes at qualifying age for national insurance pensions of a man entitled to married person's pension and of a single woman who also draw annuities as beneficiaries of a normal public service pension scheme after a fully qualifying period of service at their respective national average rates of wages.

Mr. Whitney: I regret the information requested is not available.

Invalidity Pensioners

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the latest available figures for (a) the average amount of additional component received by invalidity pensioners for (i) all invalidity pensioners and (ii) each of the groups receiving one of the rates of invalidity allowance and (b) for each of the three rates of invalidity allowance, a breakdown of the amount of earnings-related component (1) up to £1, (2) £1 to £2, (3) £2 to £3, (4) £3 to £4 and (5) up to the maximum point.

Mr. Newton: The information on (a) as at 2 April 1983, the latest date for which information is available, is as follows:

(a)	(i)	(ii)
	All IVB pensioners	IVB pensioners receiving IVA at
		Higher rate	Middle rate	Lower rate
	£	£	£	£
Average amount of additional component in payment per week	2·63	1·80	2·46	2·88

IVA=Invalidity allowance.
IVB=Invalidity benefit.

I regret that a breakdown of the amount of additional component in payment is not available.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the latest available figures for (a) the number of invalidity pensioners receiving each of the three rates of invalidity allowance, (b) for each of these three groups the number also receiving an earnings-related additional component, (c) the total number of invalidity pensioners receiving both invalidity allowance and the additional component on top of their invalidity pension, (d) of these the number also receiving supplementary benefit, (e) the number of invalidity pensioners claiming for an adult dependant and (f) the number claiming for a child dependant.

Mr. Newton: The table provides the information requested on the number of invalidity benefit beneficiaries receiving invalidity allowance and the additional component as at 2 April 1983, the latest date for which information is available.

	Higher rate IVA	Middle rate IVA	Lower rate IVA
(a) Number of IVB beneficiaries receiving IVA	184,000	153,000	281,000
(b) Number of IVB beneficiaries receiving IVA and AC	69,000	60,000	147,000

(c) The total number of IVB beneficiaries receiving both IVA and the additional component is therefore 276,000.
(d) Information on the number of IVB beneficiaries receiving both IVA and AC and supplementary benefit is not readily available.
(e) The number of IVB beneficiaries claiming for an adult dependant is 323,000.
(f) The number of IVB beneficiaries claiming for a child dependant is 112,000 but 78,000 of these beneficiaries also claimed an increase for an adult dependant and are included in the figure in (e) above.

Sick Pay

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what evidence he has received, including surveys of employee reactions, on the workings of statutory sick pay to date; and how many complaints his Department has received in the last year about statutory sick pay.

Mr. Newton: Staff from the Department's local offices have been visiting all employers to check that the scheme has been understood and is working properly. Although some errors are being made these are generally on minor technical matters which can be expected to improve as employers become more used to the scheme's rules. In the majority of cases checked, the right amount of statutory sick pay has been paid. The Department is also in frequent contact with employers and their representatives. The National Audit Office issued a report on the scheme on 19 November. Work by the Department's policy inspectorate suggests that most employees prefer to receive statutory sick pay rather than state sickness benefit. Information about the numbers of complaints received is not collected, but indications are that these have been relatively few.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the latest available figures for (a) the proportion of employees in an occupational sick pay scheme, (b) how these break down into (i) full-time and (ii) part-time manual and non-manual workers and low-paid workers where low pay is defined as less than £100 per week, (c) the average length of sickness covered in occupational sick pay schemes for each of the groups as in (b) and (d) the average payment as a proportion of salary/wages for each of the groups as in (b).

Mr. Whitney: Detailed up-to-date figures are not available. I will write to the hon. Member.

Nicorette

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make representations to the Advisory Committee on Borderline Substances to review its decision that Nicorette should not be prescribed for patients wishing to stop smoking.

Mr. John Patten: Last month the Advisory Committee on Borderline Substances reviewed the status of Nicorette in the light of recent publicity given to this product. It reaffirmed its earlier advice that the value of Nicorette in general practice remains unproven and that it should not therefore be prescribed by general practitioners.

Advisory Committee on Borderline Substances

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if the Advisory Committee on Borderline Substances is empowered to advise on prescription—only medicines.

Mr. John Patten: Yes.

Prescriptions

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report any other prescription-only medicines, apart from Nicorette, that may not be prescribed on the National Health Service by general practitioners.

Mr. John Patten: Nicorette is the only prescription-only medicine that the Advisory Committee on Borderline Substances has advised should not be prescribed by general practitioners.

Cot Deaths

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is now in a position to publish the report from the medical care research unit at Sheffield on cot deaths.

Mr. Stephen Ross asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects to publish the report on cot deaths he has commissioned from Sheffield university.

Mr. John Patten: We are considering this report.

NHS Expenditure

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how much, in money and percentage terms, of the overall National Health Service expenditure was spent on (a) pay and related costs, (b) drugs, medicines, bandages, and so on, (c) medical equipment, (d) hospital building and maintenance, (e) administration and (f) general service, and so on, and catering, laundry, and so on, in 1983-84.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The tables give the analysis of health authority current expenditure by function (table 1) and subjectively (i.e. by type) (table 2) for 1983-84. Total capital expenditure by the health authorities whose current expenditure is included in the tables was £713·9 million.

F. Hoffmann La Roche & Co., A.G.

Mr. Maclean asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list the number of drugs which are available as alternatives to each of those supplied to the health Service by F. Hoffmann La Roche & Co., A.G., its subsidiary and associated companies including Roche Products; and what is the percentage by which these alternatives are cheaper or dearer than the F. Hoffmann La Roche products;

(2) whether F. Hoffmann La Roche & Co., A.G. and its associated or subsidiary companies including Roche Products have ever been asked by his Department to reduce the cost of drugs supplied to the National Health Service or to refund the partial cost of drugs supplied on the grounds of excessive profits being made by the companies.

(3) if he will list the products and medicines supplied to the Health Service by F. Hoffmann La Roche & Co., A.G. and all its subsidiary and associated companies including Roche Products Ltd.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: MIMS, a copy of which I am sending to my hon. Friend, gives details of companies' brand name products by therapeutic class, altenatives which prescribers may wish to consider, and the prices of each. Where generic drugs are available as alternatives to non-patented products, the price to the National Health Service is shown in the Drug Tariff eg Valium 5mg 1000 tablets £13.62, diazepam £2.32; Mogadon 5mg-500 tablets £12.02, nitraxepam £2.20. Leaving aside the reductions of 2·5 per cent. in the prices of National Health Service medicines which all compaines were asked to make in 1983, Roche Products Limited have not been required to reduce prices or make repayments on grounds of excessive profits since the settlement following the Monopolies Commission report on the supply of Chlordiazepoxide and Diazepam in 1973.

Freephone Service (Campbeltown)

Mr. Wallace asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what criteria were applied in determining that a freephone service should be available to claimants and potential claimants in the area served by his Department's Campbeltown office;

(2) what is the annual cost to his Department's budget of the freephone service operated by his Department's office in the Campbeltown area, Argyll.

(3) whether he has any proposals to extend to other parts of Scotland the freephone service currently operated by his Department in the Campbeltown area;

(4) when the freephone service operated by his Department's office in the Campbeltown area started; and how many callers per month avail themselves of the facility.

Mr. Whitney: The telephone service provided by the Department's Campbeltown office for the islands of Islay and Jura began on 1 August 1983. This was an initiative springing from the Department's regional organisation "service to the public" management priority in that year. The background was concern that the service offered to the public had diminished following the withdrawal of the functions formerly provided by administrative agents on the islands on the Department's behalf. An average of 160 calls are received each month at a total annual cost of £1,800. We have at present no plans to extend the service in this and other areas.

Elderly Persons (Cold Weather)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what recommendations he now intends to issue arising from the findings of the Health Education Council concerning the effects of extreme cold upon elderly citizens.

Mr. John Patten: The Health Education Council is funding a three year project ("Your Right To Be Warm") in Leeds. This includes the development of a pack of training materials and information on all aspects of keeping warm. Apart from this project, which is still being evaluated, we are not aware of any findings by the Health Education Council on the effects of extreme cold on elderly people.

Housing Benefit

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he has any plans to abolish the housing benefit supplementary scheme.

Mr. Whitney: We have no plans, other than those already announced, to make any changes of substance in the housing benefit scheme pending the outcome of the independent review of the scheme.

Social Security Contributions

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of social security contributions collected by his Department have emanated from payments made from United Kingdom citizens resident or working in the United States of America during the last five years.

Mr. Whitney: The information requested is not available. For those employees who go to the United States of America to work for an employer who has a place of business in the United Kingdom, normal class 1 contributions are payable for the first 52 weeks abroad. These are recorded in the same way as for employees working in the United Kingdom and no separate record is kept.

For those who pay voluntary contributions, either through an agent in the United Kingdom or by annual payment, the amount recorded is the total received each year in respect of persons abroad. For those who pay by direct debit, the total amount recorded covers people who live in the United Kingdom as well as those living abroad who use this method to pay their contributions.

Rent Rebates and Allowances

Mr. John Fraser asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the current estimated total amounts for 1984-85 of rent rebates and rent allowances distinguishing between certificated and non-certificated benefit.

Mr. Whitney: The latest estimates of expenditure on rent rebates and allowances in Great Britain for 1984-85 are as follows:

	Standard £ million	Certificated £ million
Rent rebates	743	1,402
Rent allowances	194	440

Retirement Age

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated cost at unit price levels of a reduction in the retirement age to 60 years.

Mr. Whitney: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Aldershot (Mr. Critchley) on 3 December at column 78.

Pregnant Women (Dietary Payments)

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has received a copy of the report "Poverty in Pregnancy" by the Maternity Alliance, a copy of which has been sent to him; and if he will make a statement on the level of dietary payments in respect of pregnant women receiving state benefit.

Mr. Whitney: We have received this report. I refer the hon. Member to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Member for Brent, North (Dr. Boyson) to the hon. Member for Leyton (Mr. Cohen) on 20 July at columns 375-376; since then supplementary benefit has been uprated and the adult scale rates are now 6 per cent. higher in real terms than in November 1978.

Drugs List

Mr. Kirkwood asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list in the Official Report the dates of introduction of all the drugs on his proposed limited list of preparations to be available in the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Of the medicines included in the provisional list of antacids, laxatives, inhalations, antitussives, analgesics for mild to moderate pain, vitamins, tonics and bitters, and benzodiazepine sedatives and tranquillisers which it is proposed should remain available for prescription on the National Health Service which I gave in my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Congleton (Mrs. Winterton) on 10 December at columns 381-82, all but one were on the market before the start of licensing under the Medicines Act 1968 on 1 September 1971. The exact dates of their introduction are not available from our records.

The first product licences under the Medicines Act, for medicines containing the drug substance temazepam were granted in 1977. The list is of course, provisional and has been published as a basis for consultation. We will not finally decide which drugs will no longer be prescribable at public expense through the National Health Service until after this consultation with the medical and pharmaceutical professions, and the drugs industry, is complete.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what measures he intends to introduce in order to compensate those categories of patients who will no longer be entitled to National Health Service prescriptions, exempt of charges, for those categories of medicines included in the limited list proposals announced recently.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: All patients will be entitled to National Health Service prescriptions in all categories of drugs. Doctors will be able to prescribe at National Health Service expense from a limited but adequate range of drugs in those categories of drugs covered by our limited list proposals. If a patient elects to have a private prescription instead that is a matter of choice but not of medical necessity and the question of compensation does not arise.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what percentage of the £100 million which he hopes to save on the National Health Service drugs bill by his limited list proposals will come from a reduction in the number of free prescriptions as issued under current arrangements.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Our initial estimates of savings do not assume any reduction in the number of free prescriptions because there will be no need for any National Health Service patient to seek a private prescription. The limited list will meet all clinical needs.

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Social services what mechanism he proposes to establish to evaluate the suitability of medicines for prescription under the National Health Service.

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Social services what professional advice he proposes to use in finalising his limited list of medicines to be available on the National Health Service.

Mr. Fowler: My main concern is to ensure that, in the categories of minor medicines to which it applies, the limited list of drugs should be sufficient to meet all clinical needs. We are already receiving a large amount of specific evidence on this as part of the consultation process. In assessing this evidence my Chief Medical Officer will consult a number of eminent individuals from the appropriate branches of the medical and pharmaceutical professions, including Professor Alasdair Breckenridge, professor of clinical pharmacology, Liverpool; Professor David Morell, professor of general practice, London; Dr. John Tomlinson, general practitioner, Hampshire; Dr. Duncan Colin Jones, consultant physician, Portsmouth; Professor Malcolm Hodkinson, professor of geriatric medicine, London; Mr. David Coleman, retail pharmacist, Norwich.

The Chief Medical Officer may also wish to involve other specialists on particular points at a later stage.

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what alternative methods of saving money on the National Health Service drugs bill he considered before introducing his proposals for a limited list.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Among the alternatives considered were further efforts to encourage generic prescribing and various methods of introducing generic substitution.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the drugs currently available under National Health Service prescription which are not included in the provisional list circulated with the Chief Medical Officer's letter of 14 December to all doctors, indicating those for which a generic alternative will also not be available under prescription under the National Health Service, whether or not a prescription is currently required, and the proportion of current prescriptions for those drugs which are prescribed for people on free prescriptions.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Some 18,000 drugs available under the National Health Service were not included in our provisional list but most of them are in therapeutic categories which are not affected in any way by our limited list proposals. It would be pointless and a misuse of resources to list them all. If the hon. Member is interested, I would refer him to the current edition of the British National Formulary which lists all frequently prescribed drugs and indicates for each whether they are prescription only medicines.

Adequate and effective alternatives will be available for all medicines no longer available under the National Health Service from 1 April 1985.

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what criteria will be used to determine which medicines will be approved for prescription under the National Health Service after 1 April 1985.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Our intention is to provide an adequate range of effective drugs in the therapeutic categories covered by the limited list proposals so that all clinical needs can be met at the lowest reasonable cost.

GPs (Retirement)

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will consider introducing a retirement age for general practitioners.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Wolverhampton, North-East (Mrs. Short), on 17 May at column 258. We are still considering the matter.

Blindness Addition

Mr. Butterfill asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what factors are responsible for the fall in the number of persons receiving the £1.25 blindness addition to supplementary benefit, from 41,000 in December 1982 to 36,000 in December 1983, as revealed by the Department of Health and Social Security's annual statistical inquiry.

Mr. Newton: The number of claimants receiving the blindness addition in December 1983 quoted by my hon. Friend is a provisional estimate and has yet to be confirmed. The largest variation between the figures for the two years is amongst pensioners. The figures relating to pensioners' claims are based on a sample of one case in 200 and because the total number of cases involved is quite small the figures for both years are subject to fairly large sampling errors: the apparent fall may therefore simply be caused by chance in the selection of the sample.

Speech Therapists

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many speech therapists are employed within each regional health authority; what rate per 100,000 of population that represents; and how far current provision of speech therapy meets the recommendations of the committee of inquiry into speech therapy services, the Quirk report, 1972.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The numbers employed by region as at September 1983 (the last available figures) are shown in the table. The staffing levels shown represent an average for England of 4·2 qualified speech therapists per 100,000 of the population. The recommendation of the Quirk committee was that by 1992 the number of qualified staff should be increased to six per 100,000 of the population.

Clinical Psychologists

Mr. Nicholas Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many clinical psychologists are employed within each regional health authority; and how the figure for each region compares with the norm of 1:25,000 proposed by the 1977 report of the sub-committee of the standing advisory committee, chaired by Professor Trethowan.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to him on 18 December at column 144. The data presented there are the latest available. The ratio of clinical psychologists to population quoted in the question was that given in evidence by The British Psychological Society and was not included in the Trethowan committee's recommendations.

Spectacles

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he intends to issue for consultation a draft order under the Health and Social Security Act 1984 to amend the National Health Service Act 1977 ending general National Health Service subsidies for spectacles; and how long he anticipates the consultation period will then be before the order is placed before Parliament.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We are almost ready to begin consultation of interested organisations on the contents of the proposed regulations. An adequate consultation period will be allowed to enable them to come into operation on 1 April 1985.

Visually Handicapped People

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any further plans to protect the visually handicapped when the provisions of the Health and Social Security Act 1984 are fully implemented.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Nurses (Back Pain)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to collect information on the incidence of back pain amongst nurses.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. Our first priority is to consider the results of research carried out by the University of Surrey on the incidence and prevalence of back pain among nurses together with that of the Health and Safety Commission and other reports with a view to considering what further advice can usefully be given to health authorities.

Drug Abuse

Mr. Wareing asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any plans to extend the consultation period during which area health authorities are required to report on combating drug abuse in their areas.

Mr. John Patten: No.

Birth Statistics

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of total births and live births are illegitimate; what are the perinatal, neonatal, post neonatal and infant mortality rates for illegitimate babies according to the latest available figures; and whether he has any plans to modify the basis on which the social class of babies is categorised so as to include within such categorisation babies born to single mothers.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The table shows rates based upon births occurring in England and Wales during 1983.

	Number
Illegitimate live and still births per 1,000 live and still births	158
Illegitimate live births per 1,000 live births	158
Perinatal deaths per 1,000 illegitimate live and still births	13·1
Neonatal deaths per 1,000 illegitimate live births	7·4
Post-neonatal deaths per 1,000 illegitimate live births	5·9
Infant deaths per 1,000 illegitimate live births	13·3

Illegitimate births which are registered jointly by both parents are already classified by the father's social class. Illegitimate births registered by the mother alone are, where possible, classified by the mother's social class, but for nearly three quarters of such cases the information on occupation needed to do this is not, or cannot, be supplied. There are no plans at present to modify the existing basis on which births are analysed by social class of parents, but consideration is being given to obtaining more information on the occupation of mothers when births are registered.

Illegitimacy

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services for what proportion of illegitimate births the father is formally identified.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Details of the father were recorded in the birth registers for 61·3 per cent. of illegitimate births occurring in England and Wales during 1983.

Statutory Sick Pay

Mr. Yeo asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what consultations are planned on the details of the proposed extension of statutory sick pay from eight to 28 weeks.

Mrs. Currie asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what consultations are planned on the details of the proposed extension of statutory sick pay from eight to 28 weeks.

Mr. Newton: The Department has issued a consultation paper seeking views on these proposals. Copies of the paper have been sent to the Confederation of British Industry, Trades Union Congress, British Medical Association and other interested organisations, including those representing the interests of disabled people. Comments have been requested by the end of January 1985. I am arranging for copies of the paper to be sent to Standing Committee members serving on the Social Security Bill and for a copy to be placed in the Library of both Houses.

Contraception (Court of Appeal Judgment)

Mr. Knox asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make a statement following yesterday's judgment in the Court of Appeal in the case of Mrs. Gillick v. the West Norfolk and Wisbech health authority.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We shall be considering all the very wide implications of the judgment. Our Department has been granted leave to appeal to the House of Lords and intends to do so. It is plainly in the public interest that the law should be made clear by a ruling from the highest court. We hope it will be possible for the case to be heard quickly.

We are bringing the Court of Appeal's decision to the attention of doctors, health authorities and others responsible for providing medical services.

For the time being our present guidance relating to the provision of contraceptive and abortion services to young people under 16, is suspended. We shall be reviewing that guidance once the final outcome of the case is known.

Housing Benefit Scheme

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will estimate the full year cost to the housing benefit scheme if (a) November 1983 and (b) April 1984 tapers and minima were to apply from November 1984; and how many people would be affected in each case.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to the reply, 19 November 1984, column 64]: Broad estimates on the latest information available, indicate that the full year cost to the housing benefit scheme if the November 1983 tapers and minima were to apply from November 1984 would be about £120 million. Similarly the estimated full year cost if the April 1984 tapers and minima were to apply from November 1984 would be about £43 million. The number of households affected would be about 2·2 million and 1·9 million respectively.

Aspirin and Paracetamol

Mr. Tim Smith asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the known side effects of aspirin and paracetamol.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to the reply, 19 December 1984, c. 229]: The adverse effects of aspirin when used for the relief of mild-moderate pain are generally mild and infrequent. There is, however, a relatively high incidence of gastro-intestinal irritation with slight asymptomatic blood loss. Increased bleeding time can occur, as can bronchospasm and skin reactions in hypersensitive patients. If used regularly in high doses it has an anti-inflammatory effect and in common with other drugs used for this purpose, can have a much higher incidence of gastro-intestinal side-effects such as dyspepsia and gastric bleeding. At high doses, aspirin can also produce auditory side effects such as tinnitus (leading rarely to deafness). As with any medicine, it is for the clinician to balance the likely benefit/risk ratio before deciding what to prescribe.

Adverse effects of paracetamol are rare at therapeutic doses but liver damage arising from long-term use or overdosage has been recorded.

Invalidity Pensions

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many invalidity pensioners receive the additional earnings-related component; how much the average addition is; and what steps his Department takes to ensure that claimants know of this addition.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to the reply, 19 December 1984, c. 229.] The number of invalidity pensioners receiving the additional component was 365,000 as at 2 April 1983, the latest date for which information is available. The average amount of additional component in payment was £2.63 a week. As regard steps to ensure that claimants know about the additional component, the Department writes to each claimant at the 23rd week of incapacity for work and sends a leaflet about invalidity benefit which explains inter alia the earnings-related part of the benefit. The letter also asks about his recent job(s), to assist in determining title to the additional component. When the award is made the claimant is sent an award notice which shows the rate of the additional component separately. With the award notice is another leaflet which also contains a reference to the additional component.

Invalidity Pensioners

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many invalidity pensioners receive a dependency addition (a) for a wife and (b) for a husband; and what is the highest earnings disregard which could be set if a common earnings disregard were introduced on a nil cost basis.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to the reply, 23 November 1984, c. 524.] The limited statistical information available about the number of wives who might successfully claim an increase of invalidity pension for their husbands suggests that a nil cost common earnings rule base on the 100 per cent. taper which applies to male claimants would be set at between £40 and £45.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what would be the net cost of introducing a common earnings rule for adult dependants of invalidity pensioners at (a) £45 a week and (b) at the real value of the earnings disregard at November 1978.

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what are the latest available figures for the estimated net cost of introducing a common £45 earnings disregard for adult dependants of invalidity pensioners.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to the reply, 28 November 1984, c. 524.] The net annual cost of a common rule at £45.00 a week is estimated to be about £1 million. The net annual cost of a common rule at £79.50 (the 1978 value) would be of the order of £40 million.

Social Security Reviews

Mrs. Beckett asked the Secretary of State for Social Services on what subjects the social security policy inspectorate has undertaken inquiries but not yet finalised its reports; and on what date each of these inquiries commenced.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 3 December 1984, c.80]: The social security policy inspectorate has a continuing programme of work, which results in advice to Ministers and Departmental management on a wide range of issues in social security policy and administration. At the present time it has a number of separate studies in progress, including studies into single payments for furniture; national insurance and the self-employed; family income supplement; and statutory sick pay.

Dentists (Treatment costs)

Mr. Geoffrey Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many dentists provided treatment in 1983 at an average cost of more than twice the national average treatment cost.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to the reply, 27 November 1984, c.460]: In England and Wales in 1983, 1,420 dentists who provided at least 100 courses of treatment under the general dental service had an average cost per course of treatment of more than twice the national average.

THE ARTS

Works of Art (Export)

Mr. Faulds asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts whether he will list the items for which the issuing of export licences was withheld on the recommendation of the Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art during the half year ended 31 December 1984, specifying in each case the valuation and whether an item was eventually exported or retained, with particulars in the latter event of the acquiring institution; whether he will list any items for which licences have been withheld but the final disposal of which is not yet decided, specifying in each case (a) the valuation and (b) the relevant time limit; and whether a press notice will be issued from the Office of Arts and Libraries covering the information given in his reply.

Mr. Waldegrave: The items for which export licences were withheld for a period on the advice of the Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art are listed as follows. Museums and Galleries (Attendance Figures)

Mr. Faulds asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts whether he will publish in the Official Report the attendance figures for 1984 reported by the national museums and galleries in England, broken down to the individual institutions but comprising their outstations, with figures in each case of the percentage increase or decrease on the attendance figures for 1983.

Mr. Waldegrave: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Works of Art in lieu of Taxation

Mr. Faulds asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts whether he will specify the allocations made to public institutions in the United Kingdom during the half year ended 31 December of individual works of art and museum objects pre-eminent for national, scientific, historic or artistic interest which have been accepted in satisfaction of capital transfer tax, together with information, where applicable, as to conditions or wishes expressed in the matter of allocation by testators or executors; whether he will list the works of art and museum objects which are still awaiting allocation, with the respective dates of their acceptance in satisfaction of capital transfer tax; and whether a press notice will be issued from the Office of Arts and Libraries covering the information given in his reply.

Mr. Waldegrave: The information requested is as follows. The Office of Arts and Libraries will issue a press notice today covering these details.

Chatsworth Collection

Mr. Faulds asked the Parliamentary Under-Secretary of State answering in respect of the Arts whether he will list the drawings which, having been sold at auction from the Chatsworth collection on 3 July, were referred to the Reviewing Committee on the Export of Works of Art, but in respect of which that committee did not recommend the temporary withholding of an export licence, together with the valuations of the individual items.

Mr. Waldegrave: The details of applications referred to the reviewing committee are treated as confidential, because of their commercial nature, until they have been cleared with the applicants for publication in the committee's report; meanwhile, information is only supplied in respect of licences withheld on the committee's recommendation.

CIVIL SERVICE

Private Medical Insurance Schemes

Mr. Dobson asked the Minister for the Civil Service what studies have been made of the take-up by civil servants of the private medical insurance schemes, details of which were circulated by the last Government; and what information he has on the take-up by grade.

Mr. Hayhoe: No information is available centrally, by grade or otherwise, of the numbers who took up the offer of private medical insurance for civil servants. The material publicising the group discount schemes was distributed by individual Government Departments to their staffs. It was left to those civil servants who wanted to take advantage of one of the schemes to approach the company concerned direct.

ATTORNEY-GENERAL

Obscene Publications

Mr. Dobson asked the Attorney-General if he will list the books in respect of which prosecution under the Obscene Publications Act has been approved by the Director of Public Prosecutions in each year since 1974.

The Solicitor-General: The volume of material referred each year to the Director of Public Prosecutions for consideration of proceedings under the Obscene Publications Act 1959 is such that the information requested by the hon. Member can only be obtained at disproportionate expense. I am aware of the particular items with which the hon. Member is concerned and will write to him about these.

Mr. Dobson asked the Attorney-General how many prosecutions of books under the Obscene Publications Act have been authorised by the Director of Public Prosecutions since 1975 against books listed in the edition of British Books in Print current at the time of prosecution.

The Solicitor-General: The records maintained by the Director of Public Prosecutions do not contain the information requested by the hon. Member and it could be provided only at disproportionate expense.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police Forces (Establishment)

Mr. Lofthouse asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will list the authorised establishment levels of police officers for each of the metropolitan county forces and the Northumbria force for each year from 1974 to the present.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information is as follows:

Coal Industry Dispute

Mr. Merchant asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many miners have been convicted during the current miners' dispute of (a) vandalism against National Coal Board property and (b) assaults against, and intimidation of, other National Coal Board personnel.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The information requested is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Magistrates' Courts (Fines)

Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the total amount of money owing at magistrates' courts covering the Greater London area for fines.

Mr. Mellor: The total amount of fines outstanding at magistrates' courts in the Greater London area at 30 September 1984 was £13,193,000. Part of this sum consists of fines in respect of which the time allowed for payment had not expired.

Libyan Students

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he is satisfied with the arrangements for Libyan students in the United Kingdom; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brittan: Yes.

Moslems (Imprisonment)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many Moslems are currently in prison; in which prisons; and if they are provided with meals according to their religious customs.

Mr. Mellor: On 4 November 1984 there were 1,398 Moslems in prison service establishments, at the locations set out as follows. An alternative to the normal prison diet is provided for those Moslems who request it. A vegetarian diet is generally available; and establishments are encouraged to provide halal meat on an occasional basis. Appropriate steps are taken to ensure that Moslem beliefs concerning the preparation of meals are respected.

Civil Defence (North Wales Regional Headquarters)

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department whether the site for the Civil Defence North Wales regional headquarters has been determined; and whether work has started on its construction.

Mr. Giles Shaw: A site has been chosen but building work has not yet begun.

Soliciting

Mr. Parris asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will give figures for (a) the number of women imprisoned for soliciting, imprisoned after non-payment of a fine imposed for soliciting and prosecuted for soliciting in the last year before female soliciting ceased, under the terms of the Criminal Justice Act 1982, to be an imprisonable offence and (b) the number of women imprisoned for non-payment of a fine for soliciting, and the number of prosecutions for female soliciting in the year following that change.

Mr. Mellor [pursuant to his reply, 21 December 1984, c. 369-70]: Information on the number of prosecutions for offences of prostitution and the sentences imposed is published annually under offence classifications 166 and 167 in table S1.1(A) of "Criminal Statistics, England and Wales, Supplementary Tables, Volume 1".

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Artificial Insemination

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how much money has been spent by the Government on research into techniques of interspecies fertilisation in each of the last 10 years; and what proportion of total Government spending on research into infertility this figure represents in each of those years;

(2) if he will list all those individuals or establishments which have received Government funds for research into interspecies fertilisation in each of the last 10 years; how much money each received; and for what precise purpose those funds were intended;

(3) if he will give the names of individuals and the establishments where they work who are currently involved in research into interspecies fertilisation between humans and other animals;

(4) what Government funds have been made available since 1954 for research into interspecies fertilisation between humans and other animals; to whom the funds were paid; and for what precise purpose.

Mr. Brooke: I understand that the work supported by the Medical Research Council on "interspecies fertilisation" is solely related to the egg penetration test in which measurements are made of the ability of human sperm to penetrate hamster eggs. This is a test of male fertility; the test takes less than a day to perform and no embryos can develop. Project grant support was provided from 1980-83 to the department of obstetrics and gynaecology, King's College hospital medical school for a study in heterologous sperm penetration: a dynamic test of male fertility, to develop improved methods for the diagnosis of infertility in men. Expenditure was as follows:

1980-81	6
1981-82	9
1982-83	4
1983-84	Nil

The council also funds research at its reproductive biology unit, Edinburgh, which makes use of techniques of inter-species fertilisation, for the study and diagnosis of infertility in men. The costs are as follows:

	£'000s
1980-81	6
1981-82	7
1982-83	8
1983-84	9

The council estimates that its total expenditure on research relevant to infertility since 1980-81 has been as follows:

	£'000s
1980-81	1,301
1981-82	1,528
1982-83	1,586
1983-84	1,581

The percentage of the total represented by the work on inter-species fertilisation is therefore:

	Per cent.
1980-81	0·9
1981-82	1·0
1983-84	0·6

No figures are available for MRC expenditure on research in this area prior to 1980-81. It is possible that research work relevant to interspecies fertilisation is also being conducted in universities and medical schools using funds allocated for teaching and research on the advice of the University Grants Committee, but no details of any such work are available.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how much money has been spent by the Government on research into techniques of artificial insemination for humans in each of the years since such funding commenced; and what proportion of total Government spending on research into infertility this figure represents in each of those years;

(2) if he will list all those individuals or establishments which are currently in receipt of Government funding for research into artificial insemination techniques for humans; how much money each received in the current year; and for what precise purpose the funds were intended.

Mr. Brooke: The Medical Research Council, which is the Government's main agency for the support of biomedical research, is not supporting any research specifically into artificial insemination techniques for humans.

However, the council is supporting research at its reproductive biology unit in Edinburgh into ways of treating human sperm to improve its potency for use in artificial insemination. The cost of this aspect of the unit's research has been:

	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84
Relevant unit expenditure £'000s	7	8	9	10
Per cent. of total MRC expenditure on research relevant to infertility	0·5	0·5	0·6	0·6

No figures are available for MRC expenditure on research in this area prior to 1980-81. It is possible that research work relevant to artificial insemination is also being conducted in universities and medical schools using funds allocated for teaching and research on the advice of the University Grants Committee, but no details of any such work are available.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) how much money has been spent by the Government on research into techniques of in vitro fertilisation for humans in each of the years since such funding commenced; and what proportion of Government spending on research into infertility this figure represents for each of those years;

(2) if he will list all those individuals or establishments which are currently in receipt of Government funding for research into in vitro fertilisation techniques for humans; how much money each received in the current year; and for what precise purpose the funds were used.

Mr. Brooke: The Medical Research Council, which is the Government's main agency for the funding of biomedical research, supports work at its MRC reproductive biology unit in Edinburgh relevant to the development of clinical in vitro fertilisation (IVF). The unit is studying the chromosomes of ova fertilized in vitro to determine their normality, methods to promote the development of ova within the ovary and the requirements for successful implantation following IVF. The council also provides or has provided project grant support to the departments of obstetrics and gynaecology at Cambridge university and at King's College hospital medical school, London, for work on the fertility of spermatozoa. The costs relevant to the development of clinical in vitro fertilisation have been:

	1980-81	1981-82	1982-83	1983-84
Reproductive biology unit	55·5	66·3	68·6	79·0
Relevant work supported by project grants	5·6	10·7	11·6	4·9
Per cent. of total MRC expenditure on research relevant to infertility	4·6	5	5	5·3

No figures are available for MRC expenditure on research in this area prior to 1980-81. It is possible that research work relevant to in vitro fertilisation techniques is also being conducted at universities and medical schools using funds allocated for teaching and research on the advice of the University Grants Committee, but no details of any such work are available.

Human Embryos

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science (1) if he will list all those individuals or establishments which are currently in receipt of Government funding for research into the effects of the freezing of human embryos; how much money each received in the current year; and for what precise purpose the funds were used;

(2) how much money has been spent by the Government on research into the effect of the freezing of human embryos in each of the years since such funding commenced.

Mr. Brooke: The Medical Research Council, which is the Government's main agency for the support of biomedical research, is not supporting any research specifically into the effects of freezing human embryos.

Education Act 1980

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what action he has taken under section 20 of the Education Act 1980; and what was the cost involved.

Mr. Brooke: Under the powers conferred by section 20 of the Education Act 1980 my right hon. Friend supports scholarships through the national engineering scholarships scheme. The cost of this to the Department in the current financial year will amount to a little under £175,000. This figure will rise in subsequent years to £450,000 as the number of new scholarships awarded reaches an approved maximum of 300 per annum. The administrative costs to the Department of the scheme will amount to around £100,000 a year.

Soil Information System

Mr. Raffan asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will take steps to facilitate the adoption by the European Commission of the soil survey of England and Wales's computer-based soil information system as the basis of the Commission's environmental information system.

Mr. Brooke: I understand that scientific advisers of the European Commission have shown interest in the possibility of adopting the computerised system, used by the soil survey of England and Wales to describe land and water use and management, as the standard for a European system in these areas of work. Consideration of this possibility is still at a very early stage. The issues are in the first instance scientific and technical and it would not be appropriate for my right hon. Friend to seek to intervene directly with the Commission at this stage, before technical feasibility has been established.

Education and Business Partnership Schemes

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what information he collects about the number and scope of education and business partnership schemes initiated by local education authorities; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: The Department does not collect detailed information on local schemes of industry/education co-operation but there are many schemes of great diversity, and increasing attention is being paid to links with industry and commerce, in schools and particularly in the further and higher education sectors. All local education authorities are encouraged to designate an official with special responsibility for school/industry links, and there are numerous examples of local firms providing practical help in support of work in the classroom.

Links with employers are emphasised in a number of DES-supported national programmes including the school curriculum industry project, the technical and vocational educational initiative, the micro electronics programme, the lower attaining pupils programme, the college-employer links project, PICKUP and the local collaborative projects. My right hon. Friend welcomes the active support given to such co-operation by the CBI, TUC, chambers of commerce and other organisations, and the attention given to such co-operation by the Audit Commission.

In higher education, science research parks, the teaching company scheme and other grant schemes run by the Science and Engineering Research Council with DES support, Women into Science and Engineering (WISE) and the marketing and liaison work of the industrial units maintained by higher education establishments are further examples of co-operative activity between education and industry.

The trend of increased partnership is welcome and necessary and the Government are doing all they can to encourage this.

School Closures

Mr. Alan Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what weight is given to parental preference in determining appeals against school closures.

Mr. Dunn: Where my right hon. Friend decides proposals to close schools published by local education authorities under section 12 of the Education Act 1980 he has to take into account all the relevant financial, educational and other factors, including parental preference and assess where the balance lies in each individual case. The weight given to individual factors such as parental preference necessarily varies from case to case according to the individual circumstances of what is proposed, the evidence from statutory objections, and the actual level of preferences expressed by parents in the allocation procedure.

Schools (Financial Discretion)

Mr. Alan Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what is his policy about the devolution of more financial discretion to individual schools; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend is in favour of schools having significant responsibility for their own expenditure and has welcomed the identification by the Audit Commission, in its recent report on "Aspects of Non-Teaching Costs in Secondary Schools", of the potential merits of increased delegation. Proposals in the Green Paper "Parental Influence at School" (Cmnd 9242) would increase the financial responsibilities of school governing bodies and leave it open to local education authorities to delegate more. Responses to this and other proposals in the Green Paper are now being considered.

Trainee Teachers

Mr. Alan Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many trainee teachers in each of the last five years failed to complete the probationary year; and how many failed to qualify at the end of it.

Mr. Dunn: My right hon. Friend receives from LEAs each year a relatively small number of recommendations that a probationary teacher should be declared unsuitable. The number of teachers over the last five years in respect of whom such a recommendation has been received and who have been determined by my right hon. Friend at the end of their probationary period as unsuitable for further employment as a qualified teacher is as follows:

1981—30
1982—19
1983—17
1984—19

Information is not available on the number of those who leave employment as teachers, for whatever reason, before completing their probationary period. Probationary teachers normally serve a one-year period of probation, though LEAs have discretion to extend, reduce or waive the period of probation. In the majority of cases where an LEA recommends that a probationer be declared unsuitable, probation will have been extended before a final decision on unsuitablity is taken.

Her Majesty's Inspectorate

Mr. Alan Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science how many of Her Majesty's Inspectorate since 1979 have been appointed as a result of open advertising and how many as a result of direct approaches to individual recruits.

Sir Keith Joseph: All Her Majesty's inspectors are recruited through open competitions overseen by the Civil Service Commission. They are subsequently formally appointed by Her Majesty in Council, and all are required to complete satisfactorily a period of probation. Two hundred and eight inspectors have been so appointed since 1 January 1979.

Mr. Alan Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if any individual members of Her Majesty's Inspectorate specialise in multicultural education; and if he will make a statement.

Sir Keith Joseph: Twenty-six members of Her Majesty's Inspectorate in England have specialist concerns in relation to multiracial education which occupy significant proportions of their time. Other inspectors are also involved in multiracial education matters from time to time.

Departmental Appointments

Mr. Alan Howarth asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the outside bodies to which his Department makes appointments, indicating the nature of each of these appointments, the names of current appointees and the dates at which each appointment falls due for renewal.

Mr. Brooke: This information is being collected and I shall write to my hon. Friend as soon as possible.

Teaching Standards

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what plans he has to improve standards in teaching.

Mr. Dunn: The Government's plans are set out in the White Paper "Teaching Quality" (Cmnd. 8836). Action has already been taken to strengthen initial teacher training through the issue of rigorous criteria for the assessment of courses, and the establishment in August 1984 of a Council for the Accreditation of Teacher Education to review all existing courses against the criteria. The Government's plans also include improvements in the further training of serving teachers (with direct Government grants for national priorities) and measures to promote a better match between teachers' qualifications and the needs of schools. In a speech to the North of England education conference on 4 January 1985 my right hon. Friend surveyed progress since the publication of "Teaching Quality", and stressed the importance of establishing a national framework for a system to appraise the performance of teachers. Copies of this speech are available in the Library of the House.

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what were the capital allocations on (a) the housing revenue account and (b) the non-housing revenue account for (i) Glasgow and (ii) Scotland in each year since 1979-80; and if he will express (i) as a percentage of (ii).

Mr. Ancram: The information is given in the following table:

Housing Statistics

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland (1) if he will publish in the Official Report the number of houses started and the number of houses completed in the public sector in Scotland in each year since 1979; and if he will list them under the following headings (a) local authorities, (b) the Scottish Special Housing Association, (c) housing associations and (d) new towns;

(2) if he will publish in the Official Report the number of houses started and the number of houses completed in the private sector in Scotland in each year since 1979.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is published in table 11 of Scottish Housing Statistics 1983, a copy of which is available in the Library.

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will publish in the Official Report the number of houses started and completed in (a) the public sector and (b) the private sector in Glasgow in each year since 1979; and what percentage of the houses in the public sector were the responsibility of Glasgow district council.

Mr. Ancram: The information requested is set out in the following table.

Dwellings started or completed in Glasgow district

Year	Private sector		Public sector
			Total number		Proportion built by district (percentage)
	Starts	Completions	Starts	Completions	Starts	Completions

Heritage and Galleries

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will make a statement on his meeting on heritage and galleries with Mr. Tim Clifford of the Scottish Galleries.

Mr. Allan Stewart: I hope to make an official visit to the National Galleries of Scotland in the near future.

Museums and Galleries (Attendances)

Mr. Faulds asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will publish in the Official Report the attendance figures for 1984 reported by the national museums and galleries in Scotland, broken down to the individual institutions but comprising their outstations, with figures in each case of the percentage increase or decrease on the attendance figures of 1983.

Mr. Allan Stewart: The information is as follows.

	1984	Percentage change since 1983
National Galleries of Scotland (NGS)	358,605	+4·4
National Museum of Antiquities of Scotland (NMAS)	293,901	+52·6
Royal Scottish Museum (RSM)	563,063	−2·8

Notes:
The NGS are the National Gallery of Scotland, the Scottish National Gallery of Modern Art and the Scottish National Portrait Gallery (SNPG).
Since the SNPG share a building and entrance with the NMAS the attendances are included in the NMAS figure and not in that of NGS.

Rivers (Spray Irrigation)

Mr. Steel asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he plans to introduce legislation to control abstraction of water from rivers for spray irrigation; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Younger: Powers to control abstraction of water from rivers for spray irrigation purposes are already available in the Spray Irrigation (Scotland) Act 1964. I am aware, however, that these have not been found wholly adequate and I accept the need to introduce amending legislation when a place can be found in the parliamentary timetable. Meanwhile I am considering whether the present procedures can be simplified within the framework of the 1964 Act.

WALES

National Museum of Wales

Mr. Faulds asked the Secretary of State for Wales whether he will publish in the Official Report the attendance figures for 1984 reported by the National Museum of Wales, comprising its outstations, with the percentage increase or decrease on the attendance figures for 1983.

Mr. Wyn Roberts: Seven hundred and sixty thousand three hundred and seventy five, an increase of 1·3 per cent. on the revised figure for 1983.

Ministerial Appointees

Dr. Marek asked the Secretary of State for Wales if he will make it his practice to collate information about the occupations of his appointees to all the statutory bodies and the principal committees answerable to and appointed by him at appointment stage and make this information available.

Mr. Nicholas Edwards: Information about the occupations of people I appoint to the bodies listed in the Welsh Office entry in "Public Bodies 1984" is made available in many instances at the time of appointment. It is not the practice however for this information to be collated centrally within my Department.

PRIME MINISTER

Social Workers

Mr. Maclean asked the Prime Minister if she will institute a review of the probation and social services to determine inter alia (a) whether the minimum age for social workers is reasonable, (b) whether training standards are adequate, (c) whether a new disciplinary code is required and (d) what action is required to prevent criminals working in the service.

The Prime Minister: My right hon. and learned Friend the Secretary of State for the Home Department has announced his intention to review the arrangements for the disclosure of information about the criminal convictions of those seeking to work with children, and will be consulting the Association of Chief Police Officers and other interested bodies. I do not believe that a review of the other areas mentioned is necessary at the present time.

Sir Frank Cooper

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister if it is with her approval that Sir Frank Cooper becomes chairman of United Scientific Holdings within a period of under two years of being a permanent secretary at the Ministry of Defence.

The Prime Minister: The appointment of Sir Frank Cooper to the chairmanship of United Scientific Holdings does not take effect within two years of his retirement as permanent under-secretary at the Ministry of Defence, and therefore the Government's approval is not required.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Prime Minister whether she was consulted over the appointment of Sir Frank Cooper, former permanent secretary at the Ministry of Defence, as chairman of United Scientific Holdings.

The Prime Minister: No. Under the rules governing the acceptance of appointments by former Crown servants, no consultation was required, since Sir Frank Cooper will have been retired for over two years by the time he takes up appointment as chairman of United Scientific Holdings.

China

Mr. Parry asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on her recent visit to China.

The Prime Minister: I had a successful visit to China from 18 to 20 December. My main purpose was to sign the joint declaration on the future of Hong Kong together with Premier Zhao Ziyang. I also held discussions on Hong Kong with the Chinese Prime Minister and other leaders. Both sides stressed their strong commitment to the agreement and to its full implementation.

I also held useful discussions with Chinese leaders on a number of bilateral and international issues. They welcomed the proposal for a high level trade delegation to visit China in March under the leadership of Lord Young. I informed Chinese leaders that Her Majesty The Queen was pleased to accept in principle the invitation to visit China. I also invited Premier Zhao Ziyang to visit Britain in 1985.

President Reagan

Mr. Parry asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on her recent meeting with President Reagan.

The Prime Minister: I had a wide-ranging exchange of views with President Reagan, Vice-President Bush, Secretary of State Shultz, and senior members of the US Administration on 22 December at Camp David. The main subject of my discussion with the President was East-West relations and arms control talks. Among other subjects we discussed were the middle east, Central America and the US economy. We expressed our grave concern at the current famine in Africa and noted action which had already been taken by our Governments to alleviate the situation. I gave the President an account of my visit to China and my talks with Mr. Gorbachev and informed him of my recent meeting with Mr. FitzGerald.

This meeting was my first opportunity since President Reagan's re-election to discuss with him personally the prospects for arms control negotiations between the United States and the Soviet Union. Our discussions, during which we naturally touched on the strategic defence initiative (SDI) research programme, were thorough and extensive.

Our assessments of the prospects were very similar, and, as I had earlier made clear to Mr. Gorbachev, we will not allow others to create divisions between ourselves and the United States on these important questions. During our discussion the President and I agreed on four specific points:

(1) the US, and Western, aim is not to achieve superiority, but to maintain balance, taking account of Soviet developments;

(2) SDI-related deployment would, in view of treaty obligations, have to be a matter for negotiation;

(3) the overall aim is to enhance, not to undercut, deterrence;

(4) East-West negotiation should aim to achieve security with reduced levels of offensive systems on both sides. This will be the purpose of the resumed US-Soviet negotiations on arms control, which I warmly welcome.

Ex-Civil Servants (Appointments in Industry)

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Prime Minister whether Her Majesty's Government concur with the recommendation of the Treasury and Civil Service Committee that there should be a five-year delay from the moment of retirement for former civil servants taking up appointments in private industry.

The Prime Minister: The Government are currently considering their response to the 27 recommendations made in the eighth report from the Treasury and Civil Service Committee on "Acceptance of Outside Appointments by Crown Servants". This will be published as soon as possible.

Infrastructure Expenditure

Mr. Rooker asked the Prime Minister why she used figures giving the cost per job through increasing infrastructure spending of between £35,000 and £55,000 in her answer of 13 December, Official Report, column 1202; and if she will give the sources she used in quoting such figures.

The Prime Minister: The cost per job created through infrastructure expenditure can vary substantially according to the nature of the spending. The purpose in quoting the range of figures given in my reply to the right hon. Member for Birmingham Sparkbrook (Mr. Hattersley) was to indicate that spending on Government investment schemes could be a very expensive way of reducing unemployment.

The Treasury model simulations suggests that the cost to the PSBR per person taken off the unemployment register might, in the first year, be around £37,000 for local authority housing building; or around £47,000 for central Government investment. Furthermore, the estimated cost per job or per person taken off the unemployment register would rise over time as the increase in employment is eroded by higher interest rates and inflation.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Radio Wavebands (Consultative Document)

Mr. Moynihan asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what conclusions he has reached on the future of bands I and III in the light of the response he received to the consultative document, Cmnd. 9241; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Pattie: I hope to let the House know later this month what conclusions my right hon. Friend has reached.

West Midlands (Motor Industry)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the level of sales figures in the motor industries of the West Midlands region during the last five years; and what was the work force level for each year during the same period.

Mr. Butcher: Information in the form requested is not available. Total production of motor vehicles in the United Kingdom, and estimated total United Kingdom employment in the vehicle assembly industry, for the years in question were as follows:

	Total production '000 vehicles	Estimated total employment '000
1979	1,478·9	433·1
1980	1,312·9	411·8
1981	1,184·2	354·7
1982	1,156·5	318·0
1983	1,289·1	306·0

Industrial Assistance

Mr. Merchant asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much Government financial assistance has been given to all industry in the north-east of England in the last 10 years to offset working losses.

Mr. Butcher: No financial assistance is given to industry for the purpose of offsetting working losses but, in considering the external financing limits of public sector industry forecast cash flow, taking account of any losses is an important factor.

Mr. Merchant asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how much public capital has been invested over the last 10 years in the north-east of England, in the following industries (a) coal mining, (b) shipbuilding, (c) steel and (d) other.

Mr. Butcher: Financial assistance given in the north-east region since 1972, under the Industry Act 1972 and the Industrial Development Act 1984, has amounted to around £1,380 million.

Information on investment in the region by British Shipbuilders and the British Steel Corporation is not readily available, but I shall write to my hon. Friend.

Public investment in the coal industry is a matter for my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Energy.

Selective Financial Assistance

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the number of offers of selective financial assistance and the amount paid on Merseyside in each year since 1974.

Mr. Trippier: Information relating to sections 7 and 8 of the Industrial Development Act 1982 for Merseyside county is as follows:

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what was the number of offers of selective financial assistance and the amount paid in each year since 1974 in Kirkby and Prescott.

Glass and Glazing (Exhibition)

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will arrange for an exhibition relating to the Glass and Glazing Federation to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. Trippier: Yes. Arrangements have been made for such an exhibition in the Upper Waiting Hall to take place from Monday 4 February to Friday 8 February 1985.

Regional Development Grants

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry (1) what was the number of offers of regional development grant and the amount paid in Kirkby and Prescott in each year since 1974;

(2) what was the number of offers of regional development grants and the amount paid on Merseyside in each year since 1974.

Mr. Trippier: Regional development grants have been paid in respect of approved expenditure incurred in providing eligible assets on qualifying premises in development areas, including special development areas. There have not been separate offers in advance as in the case of regional selective assistance.

Because of the way in which records are kept, it is not known how many applications for regional development grant there have been in respect of premises in the areas specified, or what payments of such grants were made in respect of such premises in 1974-6. The information available in respect of grant paid from 1977 onwards is given in the following table:

*Regional development grant paid

† Merseyside comprises the Merseyside metropolitan county and those parts of the former Merseyside special development area outside the Merseyside metropolitan county.

‡ Kirkby and Prescott are the former Kirkby employment office area and the former Prescott employment office area respectively.

Turkey

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what are the figures for imports and exports with Turkey for each of the last 10 years for which figures are available.

Mr. Fletcher: The information is as follows:

Value £m

	United Kingdom Imports (cif)	United Kingdom Exports (fob)
1974	34·9	104·8
1975	34·6	143·6

Note: all figures are on the current statistical basis.

Export Licences (Chatsworth Collection)

Mr. Faulds asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many export licences have now been issued, without being referred to the Reviewing Committee for the Export of Works of Art, in respect of drawings which were sold at auction from the Chatsworth collection on 3 July.

Mr. Fletcher: Forty.

Radio Spectrum (Privatisation)

Dr. McDonald asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if his Department has put out to tender a feasibility study of the privatisation of the radio spectrum; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Butcher: No. But, following a recommendation in the Merriman report on the radio spectrum, Cmnd. 9000, it is the Government's intention, as stated in the British Telecom offer document — page 17 — to commission a feasibility study on the possibility of introducing in the future some form of pricing for the spectrum in place of or in addition to the present licence fee basis. I shall inform the House when the contract for the study has been made.

British Leyland

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if Her Majesty's Government propose to extend any further financial assistance over and above regional aid to British Leyland.

Mr. Butcher: No.

Loan Guarantee and Business Expansion Schemes

Mr. Gould asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what has been the failure rate for firms which have received assistance under the loan guarantee scheme and the business expansion scheme.

Mr. Trippier [pursuant to his reply, 21 December 1984, c. 406]: Experience with the earliest loan guarantee scheme loans suggests that 40 per cent. of firms benefiting from the scheme could fail. However, it is hoped that there will be some improvement on later loans. No comparable figures are available for failures amongst companies receiving business expansion scheme investment.

Coal Industry Dispute

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how many jobs have been lost in allied industries owing to the dispute in the mining industry; and how many he estimates will be lost as a result of continuing action.

Mr. Peter Bottomley: I have been asked to reply.

I refer my hon. Friend to my reply given to my hon. Friend the Member for Berkshire, East (Mr. MacKay) on 18 December 1984 at column 112.

OVERSEAS DEVELOPMENT

Aid Statistics

Mrs. Currie asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will publish in the Official Report a table showing the amount of overseas aid spent (a) in each country or (b) through each international organisation in 1983-84, the amount due to be spent in 1984-85 and the amount planned for 1985-86.

Mr. Raison: The information requested is not yet available. Figures for 1983-84 will be contained in the first edition of a new ODA statistical publication which will be available in February, and placed in the Library of the House. In future it will be published annually and show data on a financial year basis for the preceding years. So far British aid statistics have been published only on a calendar year basis. Information for 1984-85 will be in the Spring Supplementary Estimate for the Overseas Aid Vote Class II, 8 which will be available in February and bring up to date information already contained in the 1984-85 Main Estimates. Information for 1985-86 will be contained in the Main Estimate for that year, which is now under preparation and will be presented to Parliament in March.

Mr. Wood asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what aid has been given by the United Kingdom to the following countries since 1979; for what purpose; and in what form it has been given: Zimbabwe, Tanzania, Zambia, India, Jamaica, Mozambique, Nigeria and Cuba.

Mr. Raison: The figures for each of the years 1979 to 1983, the latest year for which figures are available, are as follows:

Food Aid (Report)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the report of the Court of Auditors of the European Community in relation to the delivery of food aid to the Third world.

Mr. Raison: The report concerns food aid committed in 1983 and is critical of some aspects of the management of the Community's food aid programme in that year. Measures have been taken since then, with our strong support, to ensure that more of the annual programme is delivered within the year and to reduce the average length of time between commitment and delivery. There is further scope for speeding up deliveries, particularly of emergency food aid (which the report does not cover), and we are pursuing this with our partners and the Commission.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Soil

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what research has been undertaken into the effects of present agricultural and silvicultural systems on soil erosion and changes of soil fertility in the United Kingdom.

Mrs. Fenner: Much research on soil erosion has been undertaken overseas, where it is a major and extensive problem. In the United Kingdom my Ministry, the Agricultural and Food Research Council, universities and polytechnics have undertaken surveys and investigations on soil erosion. The factors influencing erosion risk are well known; the most important are on soil stability, slope, cover crop and intensity of rainfall. The Agricultural and Development Advisory Service gives advice to farmers on measures to combat soil erosion where this problem exists.

A wide range of research has been and is currently undertaken to investigate the effect of agricultural practice on soil fertility in the United Kingdom.

Soil Survey

Mr. Raffan asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he is yet in a position to announce the future level of funding of the soil survey of England and Wales.

Mrs. Fenner: We hope to make an announcement shortly. Although my Ministry funds the soil survey, the survey is used by other organisations, businesses and individuals and its future funding therefore is not a matter for this Ministry alone.

Food Advisory Committee

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what matters he has referred to the Food Advisory Committee since its inception, and what are his reasons for so doing on (a) the composition, labelling and advertising of food and (b) additives, contaminants and other substances which are, or may be, present in food or used in its preparation with particular reference to the exercise of powers conferred on Ministers by sections 4, 5 and 7 of the Food and Drugs Act 1955.

Mr. Cohen asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what matters he has referred to the Food Advisory Committee since its inception, and what are his reasons for so doing on (a) the composition, labelling and advertising of food and (b) additives, contaminants and other substances which are, or may be, present in food or used in its preparation with particular reference to the exercise of powers conferred on Ministers by sections 4, 5 and 7 of the Food and Drugs Act 1955.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Wales what matters he has referred to the Food Advisory Committee since its inception, and what are his reasons for so doing on (a) the composition, labelling and advertising of food and (b) additives, contaminants and other substances which are, or may be, present in food or used in its preparation with particular reference to the exercise of powers conferred on Ministers by sections 4, 5 and 7 of the Food and Drugs Act 1955.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what matters he has referred to the Food Advisory Committee since its inception, and what are his reasons for so doing on (a) the composition, labelling and advertising of food and (b) additives, contaminants and other substances which are, or may be, present in food or used in its preparation with particular reference to the exercise of powers conferred on Ministers by sections 4, 5 and 7 of the Food and Drugs Act 1955 and the corresponding provisions in enactments relating to Scotland.

Mr. Cohen asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what matters he has referred to the Food Advisory Committee since its inception, and what are his reasons for so doing on (a) the composition, labelling and advertising of food and (b) additives, contaminants and other substances which are, or may be, present in food or used in its preparation with particular reference to the exercise of powers conferred on Ministers by sections 4, 5 and 7 of the Food and Drugs Act 1955 and the corresponding provisions in enactments relating to Northern Ireland.

Mrs. Fenner: I am replying on behalf of all my colleagues to whom this question has been addressed, since my Ministry provides the secretariat.

During its first year of operation the Food Advisory Committee has concentrated on progressing the various tasks that it inherited from its two predecessors, the Food Standards Committee and the Food Additives and Contaminants Committee.

The more important items have included continuing work on a review of the use of colouring matter in food and a review of the regulations controlling skimmed milk with non-milk fat, on which its report was published on 19 September 1984.

Sugar Consumption

Sir Peter Mills asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food, pursuant to his reply to the hon. Member for Wolverhampton, North East, (Mrs. Short) Official Report, 10 December, columns 377-78, if he will place in the Library the scientific evidence upon which he is supporting the initiative of the Health Education Council to reduce sugar consumption.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I have been asked to reply.

Epidemiological surveys, human clinical studies and animal experiments indicate that frequent or high intake of sugary foods predisposes to dental decay. For recent reviews of the evidence my hon. Friend may wish to consult "Sugar and Dental Caries: A Review of Human Studies" by Dr. E. Newbrun ("Science" Vol. 217, 30 July 1982) and "Diet and Dental Caries" by A. J. Rugg-Gunn ("The Prevention of Dental Disease" edited by Professor J. J. Murray, Chapter 2, OUP (1983)).

HOUSE OF COMMONS

Palace of Westminster (Speed Limits)

Dr. Marek asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will take steps to ensure that official cars travelling within the precincts of the Palace of Westminster do so at a moderate speed.

Mr. Biffen: I have brought the hon. Member's concern over this matter to the notice of the appropriate authorities of the Palace.

Government Legislation

Mr. Rooker asked the Lord Privy Seal if he will list the Bills introduced in the current Session by Her Majesty's Government which were not referred to in the Gracious Speech of 6 November.

Mr. Biffen: The following Bills which were not referred to in the Gracious Speech have been introduced this Session by Her Majesty's Government.

Brunei and Maldives Bill
Civil Aviation Bill
Friendly Societies Bill
Milk (Cessation of Production) Bill
Mineral Workings Bill
New Towns and Urban Development Corporations Bill
Shipbuilding Bill
Water (Fluoridation) Bill

NORTHERN IRELAND

Tourism

Mr. Hirst asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will undertake to collect and publish accurate statistics on an annual basis showing the number of people employed in the tourism industry in Northern Ireland.

Dr. Boyson: No. Like other countries, Northern Ireland does not maintain separate records of employment solely attributable to tourism.

Tigers

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will introduce legislation to prohibit the keeping of tigers on private property in Northern Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Boyson: No. The existing public health and animal welfare provisions to control the keeping of wild animals are adequate.

Murder Statistics

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many murders have been committed in (a) County Armagh, (b) County Tyrone, (c) County Fermanagh and (d) County Londonderry since 1970 to the latest available date.

Mr. Scott: Criminal records are not retained on a county basis and to obtain all the information requested would involve disproportionate cost. However, a special exercise has produced a breakdown of murders on a county basis for the current year (up to 16 December): 10 murders have been committed in County Armagh, 14 in County Tyrone, 6 in County Fermanagh and 2 in County Londonderry. The numbers of murders between 1970 and 1983 in the police divisions which include the principal parts of each of the counties in question were as follows:

RUC Division and No. of Murders

K (Co Armagh)—141
M (Co Tyrone)—71
L (Co Fermanagh)—75
N & O (Co Londonderry)—143

Terrorism

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what has been the total number of terrorist incidents in Northern Ireland in each of the last five years.

Mr. Scott: The number of terrorist incidents* arising from the security situation in Northern Ireland is as follows:

Year	Total
1980	1,044
1981	1,720
1982	915
1983	834
1984 (up to 30 November)	555

* These incidents include shooting and bombing attacks against the security forces and civilians; the recovery of unexploded devices; and commercial bombings.

Plastic Bullets

Miss Maynard asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many formal police complaints have been received in the last two years in relation to incidents where plastic bullets have been involved; how many of these have been upheld; and what disciplinary action has been taken against the officers against whom complaints were made.

Mr. Scott: I would refer the hon. Member to the reply my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State gave to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry) on 17 December at column 61.

Miss Maynard asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many claims for damages have been made in the last two years for alleged injury by plastic bullets fired by (a) the Army and (b) the Royal Ulster Constabulary in Northern Ireland; what have been the results so far; in how many cases liability has been admitted; in how many cases the court has made the finding of liability; and what is the total sum of damages paid to date.

Mr. Scott: Since 1 January 1983, 32 claims have been made against the police authority for Northern Ireland in respect of injuries allegedly caused by plastic baton rounds fired by the police. To date only one has been brought to a conclusion. This was settled out of court, for an undisclosed sum, without an admission of liability.

Information in respect of similar claims against the Army and in respect of any applications under criminal injuries compensation legislation is not readily available and could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Ulster Museum

Mr. Faulds asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether he will publish in the Official Report the attendance figures for 1984 reported by the Ulster Museum, comprising its outstations, with the percentage increase or decrease on the attendance figures for 1983.

Mr. Scott: It is estimated that about 255,000 people had visited the Ulster Museum and the Armagh County Museum by the end of 1984, a decrease of some 5 per cent. on the attendance figure for 1983.

Teachers (Salaries)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) what are the criteria used for the award of additional score points to secondary schools in conection with the salaries being offered to teachers;

(2) pursuant to his reply of 20 December, how many score points have been awarded to each of the secondary schools listed in that reply.

Mr. Scott: The main criterion used by education and library boards to designate schools of exceptional difficulty for the award of additional scale score points was the proportion of pupils who qualified for free school meals; other factors such as truancy, staff turnover and the proportion of pupils with linguistic difficulties were also taken into account. The additional scale score points awarded to each school are as follows:

Trials

Mr. Hume asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland (1) if he will make a statement on the delays in bringing cases to trial in Northern Ireland;

(2) if he will make a statement on the time served in custody on remand by people charged with offences under emergency legislation in Northern Ireland.

Mr. Hurd [pursuant to the reply, 19 December 1984, c. 217]: The Government continue to be concerned at the length of time taken to bring cases to trial and to complete the judicial process in Northern Ireland, especially in a small number of complex cases. A number of measures are being pursued, including the appointment already announced of an additional county court judge; but there is no one measure which is likely efficiently to reduce delays while allowing for the appropriate procedures and rights to be observed. I remain in touch with the Attorney-General and the Lord Chancellor in the hope of achieving improvement.

DEFENCE

RAF Honington (Noise)

Mr. Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Defence what progress has been made in implementing his Department's policy to pay injurious affection, compensation and noise insulation grants as a result of increased noise at RAF Honington; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: Nine claims for injurious affection compensation have now been settled. These have all been from eligible persons residing within the boundary of the noise insulation grant scheme. I am pleased to have this opportunity to confirm that claims for compensation may also be paid to owner occupiers of dwellings and certain other properties outside the scheme boundary in line with part I of the Land Compensation Act 1973, the provisions of which my Department has agreed to follow administratively and which do not limit payment to the boundary of any noise insulation grant scheme. Claimants will need to show that their property has suffered depreciation in value as a direct result of the increase in noise from the deployment of Tornado aircraft to RAF Honington in 1981. In view of previous uncertainty over those who may be eligible to submit claims for compensation, the last date for receipt of claims has been extended to 31 December 1985.

Progress with noise insulation grants has been delayed because of requests by applicants to waive the requirement to fit permanent ventilation. These need careful consideration because safety aspects are involved, but I hope to announce the result shortly.

Drugs (Prescriptions)

Mr. Eldon Griffiths asked the Secretary of State for Defence if doctors practising in the armed services are required to prescribe generic rather than branded drugs; and what estimate he can make of the percentage of the total drugs prescribed that are generic.

Mr. Lee: I refer to the answer given to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras (Mr. Dobson) on 12 November 1984 at column 156, when I stated that it has long been Ministry of Defence policy to insist on generic dispensing of drugs whenever a generic equivalent of the item prescribed exists. There are of course many branded drugs which have no generic equivalent. It has not been possible to estimate the proportions of service prescriptions for branded and generic drugs.

Type 22 Frigates

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now announce his decision upon the placing of the two orders for type 22 frigates.

Mr. Lee: No decision on the placing of these orders has yet been taken.

RAF (Basic Trainer)

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he expects to announce his decision on the award of a contract for the new basic trainer for the Royal Air Force.

Mr. Butler: As I stated in my answer to my hon. Friend the Member for Ruislip-Northwood (Mr. Wilkinson) on 18 December at column 135, British Aerospace and Shorts have now been invited to submit the best and final offers. Hunting Firecracker Aircraft and AAC-Westlands have subsequently indicated that they wish to submit revised bids and I have agreed that their proposals will be considered. It is expected that, after evaluation of the new offers, a final decision will be made in the spring.

NATO (Troop Deployments)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Defence which member states of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation do not make their troop deployment subject to control by the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation.

Mr. Stanley: Apart from those few forces directly under NATO command, all peacetime troop deployments by member nations of the North Atlantic Treaty Organisation are made under national control.

Mr. Peter Levene

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether, on his appointment as chief of defence procurement, Mr. Peter Levene has been asked to divest himself of all his shareholdings in United Scientific Holdings and all its subsidiary and related companies.

Mr. Butler: Yes.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence what conditions have been placed on Mr. Peter Levene's commercial activities in the arms world following completion of his five years as chief of defence procurement.

Mr. Butler: Mr. Levene has agreed to abide by the normal rules that govern the acceptance of business or other outside appointments, which apply to Crown servants.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish the report on defence procurement prepared by Mr. Peter Levene when he was temporary adviser to the Secretary of State for Defence.

Mr. Butler: No.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether, in his report on defence procurement, Mr. Peter Levene recommended the appointment of a new chief of defence procurement.

Mr. Butler: No.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether Mr. Peter Levene in his new position as chief of defence procurement will have any responsibility for contracts for refitting naval vessels and any supervisory role in the work of the royal dockyards.

Mr. Butler: Responsibility for refitting naval vessels, including contract refitting, rests with the chief of fleet support. As regards contract refitting, while the chief of defence procurement is administratively responsible for the contracts staff and for certain project overseeing staff who assist the chief of fleet support in this area, it is the chief of fleet support who is the responsible accounting officer. The chief of fleet support is responsible, both in terms of departmental organisation and as the accounting officer, for the work of the royal dockyards.

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence on what basis the salary figure of £95,000 for Mr. Peter Levene the new chief of defence procurement was agreed.

Mr. Butler: Mr. Levene's salary was negotiated at a level acceptable to both the Government and Mr. Levene. This is substantially lower than the salary he receives at present.

Mr. David Perry

Mr. Gordon Brown asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the present salary of Mr. David Perry, chief of defence procurement.

Mr. Butler: £45,500.

RAF (Fuel Allowance)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he plans further cuts in the Royal Air Force's fuel allowance.

Mr. Lee: No further cuts are planned for 1984-85.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what effects a 10 per cent. cut in the Royal Air Force fuel allowance will have on pilot flying training.

Mr. Lee: Some adjustments to the pattern of flying training of new pilots will be necessary but the number of pilots joining the front line from operational conversion units will not be affected.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence what effects a 10 per cent. cut in the Royal Air Force fuel allowance will have on Support Command.

Mr. Lee: Some adjustments to the pattern of flying training of new pilots will be necessary.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how much money he envisages saving by cutting the Royal Air Force's fuel allowance by 10 per cent.; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Lee: The overspend to be corrected by this measure is over £20,000,000.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he is satisfied that a 10 per cent. cut in the Royal Air Force fuel allowance will not impair the operational effectiveness of the United Kingdom-based air defence forces.

Mr. Lee: Yes.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he is satisfied that a 10 per cent. cut in the Royal Air Force's fuel allowance will not impair the operational effectiveness of 18 Group.

Mr. Lee: Yes.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he is satisfied that a 10 per cent. cut in the Royal Air Force's fuel allowance will not impair the operational effectiveness of the air force in the central front.

Mr. Lee: Yes.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence why the Royal Air Force's fuel allowance has been cut.

Mr. Lee: The fuel allowance has been reduced in order to ensure that expenditure upon the Royal Air Force remains within the agreed level of funding for 1984-85.

RAF (Strike Capability)

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he is satisfied that the current strength of the RAF's United Kingdom-based maritime strike force is adequate for the United Kingdom's present defence needs; and whether he is satisfied that the Royal Air Force will have an adequate maritime strike capability for the next 10 years.

Mr. Stanley: I am satisfied that the RAF's United Kingdom-based maritime strike force represents a significant contribution to NATO's overall requirements for such aircraft and that the Buccaneer equipped with the Sea Eagle anti-ship missile will provide an effective maritime strike capability for the RAF into the mid-1990s.

Nimrod Aircraft

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence when his Department plans to issue tender documents for maintenance work on the 32 Nimrod Mark 2 aircraft.

Mr. Butler: I hope to make an announcement about Nimrod major servicing policy shortly.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether his Department is currently considering the need for a Nimrod replacement for the mid-1990s or beyond.

Mr. Butler: Yes, but our considerations are still at an early stage.

Buccaneer Aircraft

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence why his Department have shelved plans to bring into service an additional 10 Buccaneer strike aircraft.

Mr. Butler: It is planned to maintain two squadrons of Buccaneers in the maritime strike/attack role. It is long standing policy not to disclose the aircraft strengths of front line units.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he has any plans for a Buccaneer replacement for the mid-1990s or beyond.

Mr. Butler: There are no plans for a new aircraft design to replace the Buccaneer.

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence how long the Buccaneer aircraft will remain in service in the maritime attack role.

Mr. Stanley: They are planned to remain in service into the mid 1990s.

Tornado Aircraft

Mr. McNamara asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement concerning the capability of Tornado GR1 in the maritime attack role.

Mr. Stanley: The Federal Republic of Germany has deployed the Tornado in the maritime attack role, but given the availability of Buccaneers we have no present plans to use RAF Tornado GR1s in this role.

Ocean-going Tug (Sinking)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the sinking of an ocean-going tug off the Isle of Wight on 24 December 1984 on its way to the Falklands.

Mr. Stanley: I shall answer shortly.

HMS Conqueror

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence, pursuant to his reply of 14 December 1984, Official Report, column 616, whether the portion of the record of HMS Conqueror's position obtained by taking readings from the submarine's inertial navigation system covering 30 April to 4 May 1982 has been retained for analysis.

Mr. Stanley: The portion of HMS Conqueror's record currently known to have been retained for analysis covers the period from the morning of 2 May 1982 to the morning of 3 May 1982.

TRANSPORT

Welsh Rail Services

Mr. Barry Jones asked the Secretary of State for Transport how many £5 million-plus schemes for improvement to any section of the Welsh rail network have been approved by the British Railways Board in each year since 1979; and how many such schemes have been approved each year since 1979 for (a) England and (b) Scotland.

Mr. Ridley: Much investment benefits the railway system generally, or extensive parts of it, rather than particular areas. And most projects are less than £5 million in size. Of the 44 projects over £5 million approved by the BRB since 1979, 18 were not associated with a particular part of the United Kingdom. Only one project—Chester area resignalling—had specific benefits that extended into a part of Wales. The figures requested for England and Scotland are as follows:

	England	Scotland
1979	3	—
1980	*2	—
1981	1	—
1982	2	—
1983	6	3
1984	8	1

* Includes Chester area resignalling scheme.

Airports

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Transport what information he has on the numbers of passengers whose journeys originate or have their destinations at Britain's regional airports choosing to interconnect through European gateways in preference to London.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Such information can be obtained from origin and destination surveys conducted by the Civil Aviation authority, as follows:

1983—routes from Manchester, Birmingham, East Midlands and Liverpool.
1982 — routes from Edinburgh, Glasgow, Prestwick and Aberdeen.
1975-76—routes from other major regional airports.

The information cannot be simply summarised, but details can be provided by the CAA for specific routes or route groupings. For instance, in 1983, about a quarter of passengers from Manchester airport interlining on scheduled routes chose to connect at European airports and about three quarters at London airports.

Mr. Kennedy asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether, as a result of his statement on 20 December, he expects any changes in the arrangements or timing of the sale of the Civil Aviation Authority airports in the Highlands and Islands of Scotland.

Mr. Michael Spicer: No, it is not essential that clause 5 of the Civil Aviation Bill is enacted before any of the aerodromes are sold.

International Passenger Survey

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether he will be using data collected by the Government's international passenger survey in 1984 to reassess the proportions of passengers with actual origins or destinations outside the South East of England.

Mr. Michael Spicer: Data on the origins and destinations of passengers are kept under review. The results of the international passenger survey for 1984 will be available by mid-1985 and will provide useful information, indicating areas of longest stay for foreign passengers, and for United Kingdom passengers their home by planning region. Civil Aviation Authority surveys provide information on the origin and destination of terminating passengers at the major United Kingdom airports. A survey was carried out in 1983 at Manchester, Birmingham, East Midlands and Liverpool airports, and in 1984 at the British Airports Authority's London airports and Luton.

Road Humps Regulations

Mr. Shersby asked the Secretary of State for Transport what consideration he has given to the proposals submitted to him by the hon. Member for Uxbridge for the amendment of the Road Humps Regulations to permit illuminated signs at each end of a private street or road as an alternative to the illumination of individual humps.

Mrs. Chalker: I have written to my hon. Friend.

London Underground

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Transport, in each of the last 10 years, how many fires have occurred on London Transport Underground which had some effect on passenger service; and what information he has as to the cause of each fire.

Mr. Ridley [pursuant to his reply, 18 December 1984, c. 132]: The number of fires on London Regional Transport's railways in each of the last 10 years which had some effect on passenger services is shown in the table:

Fires on London Regional Transport's Railways which affected passenger services

Year	Fires on trains	Fires in stations, signal boxes, and on and alongside the track
1975	Nil	1
1976	Nil	5
1977	Nil	5
1978	Nil	3
1979	Nil	5
1980	Nil	8
1981	2	7

* Provisional figures.

As well as the recent fire at Oxford Circus, the figures include three serious incidents each of which was the subject of a formal inquiry and a published report. These were at Finsbury Park in 1976; at Goodge Street in 1981; and between Wood Green and Bounds Green in 1982. All the other incidents were minor. Individual causes are too various to list, but they include arson, ignition of dust by sparks from the conductor rails, and carelessly discarded cigarettes.

EMPLOYMENT

Youthaid

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment, pursuant to the answer of the Minister of State on 20 November, Official Report, column 138, if he will list the documents he has received from the organisation Youthaid in the past six months; and if he will also list those in which there are inaccuracies.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The answer referred to was given in response to a question about the destinations of young people leaving the youth training scheme. Youthaid had written to me on this subject on 5 November and to my right hon. Friend on 19 November. In both these letters, Youthaid wrongly claimed that participation in the scheme did not offer young people a good chance of a job at the end, a point it chose to publicise as part of its apparent campaign to denigrate the achievements of the scheme.

In fact, the information available so far is very encouraging. The latest sample survey carried out by the Manpower Services Commission showed that almost 60 per cent. of young people leaving the scheme went into work and that an additional 13 per cent. either went into, or intended to go into, further education or training.

Manpower Services Commission (Special Programmes)

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list the name and eligibility conditions of all special programmes managed by the Manpower Services Commission to date, including now abandoned programmes; what has been the total number of entrants on to each programme; what percentage of entrants on to each programme have been aged (a) under 25 years, (b) over 25 years, (c) between 25 and 44 years and (d) over 45 years; and what percentage of entrants in sub-groups (b), (c) and (d) were out of work for more than 52 weeks at the time of entry.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The information is not available in the form requested and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Unemployed Persons

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment what percentage of unemployed persons have been out of work for a year or more and are aged (a) under 25 years, (b) over 25 years, (c) 25 to 44 years and (d) over 45 years; of the latter sub-groups, what percentage are (i) male and (ii) female; of the latter sub-groups, what percentage are (x) married, (y) single, widowed, separated or divorced; of the latter sub-groupings, what percentage (1) have dependent children of 0 to 15 years and (2) do not have dependent children of 0 to 15 years; of all sub-groupings, what percentages are (aa) unskilled or semi-skilled manual workers and (bb) are not unskilled or semi-skilled manual workers; and of all sub-groups, what percentage have (A) an employed spouse, (B) an unemployed spouse and (C) an economically inactive spouse.

Mr. Alan Clark: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to extend the youth training scheme to two years.

Mr. Peter Morrison: We have no immediate plans to extend the youth training scheme in this way, and eligibility rules for the scheme in 1985-86 (which are largely unchanged from this year) were announced on 12 November 1984. However, various proposals for the enhancement of provision for 14-18 year olds are currently being considered.

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people have refused to take up the offer of a place on youth training schemes since the scheme was launched.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The total number of refusals is not available. The number of people reported to the unemployment benefit service, in the period 1 September 1983 to 30 September 1984, the latest date for which figures are available, for refusing a youth training scheme place was 2,308.

Skillcentres

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will undertake a thorough survey of users and potential users of skillcentre graduates in each area in which a closure has been proposed by the Skillcentre Training Agency, including in the survey a question as to the respondents' views on the proposed closure; and if he will publish the results in the Official Report.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The success of skillcentres in meeting the needs of employers is already monitored through regular surveys of people completing courses under the training opportunities scheme. We see no need to burden employers with yet more official paperwork.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Employment what plans he has to instruct the Manpower Services Commission to consult local authorities and Members of Parliament before finally approving the closure of skillcentres.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The Manpower Services Commission is itself representative of local authority interests, as well as employer, employee and professional education interests. Members of Parliament have the opportunity to make representations in the usual ways about the skillcentre training agency proposals, including through the Select Committee on Employment which is currently considering them.

Technical and Vocational Education Initiative

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will list all the local education authorities which have (a) applied and (b) been accepted to participate in the technical and vocational education initiative.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The information requested is set out as follows by the academic year in which the proposed project is or was due to start. No decisions have been taken about applications for 1985-86.

Unemployed Young Persons

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number and percentage of young people aged 16 and 17 years who are (a) unemployed and (i) claiming benefit and (ii) not claiming benefit; (b) on a youth training scheme, (c) in school, (d) at further education establishments, (e) in work and (f) elsewhere at the latest available date and for each of the past five years, with appropriate adjustments for the available categories in previous years.

Mr. Alan Clark: The available estimates are shown in the following table:

Also includes some who are seeking work but not claiming benefit (for 1983 and 1984) or not registered for employment (prior to 1983), some who are neither employed nor seeking work (eg because of domestic responsibilities) and net errors in the other estimates.
Estimates are rounded to the nearest 10,000.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the number and percentage of unemployment among 16 and 17-year-olds (a) nationally, (b) by ethnic origin, (c) by region and (d) by sex at the last available date and for September, January and June in each of the past five years.

Mr. Alan Clark: Information on unemployed persons under 18, nationally and regionally by sex for January, April, July and October for each of the past five years, is available in the House of Commons Library. The unemployment rates for under 18-year-olds by sex since January 1980 appear in table 2.15 of the December 1984 issue of Employment Gazette; however, unemployment rates by age are not available by region.

Following the change in the basis of the unemployment count in October 1982, details of the ethnic origin of unemployed are no longer available from the count. Figures by country of birth or parents' birth for unemployed registrants aged under 18 for February each year up to 1982 are available in the House of Commons Library, but not in the form of percentage rates. Some information on numbers and percentages unemployed by ethnic origin is available from the 1979, 1981 and 1983 labour force surveys but not in sufficient detail to provide figures for under 18 year age groups.

Manpower Services Commission

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people are presently participating on schemes run by the Manpower Services Commission which are broadly similar to those run by community industry.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Young people with personal and social disadvantages participate in both the youth training scheme and the community programme. But statistics are not kept which would enable a valid comparison to be made with those employed on the community industry scheme.

Apprenticeships (Federal Republic of Germany)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Employment what studies he has made of training apprenticeships involving specific skills organised for school leavers in the Federal Republic of Germany.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Training provision in the Federal Republic of Germany was considered in the Institute of Manpower Studies' recent report "Competence and Competition", sponsored by the Manpower Services Commission and the National Economic Development Office. In addition, I had the opportunity of seeing for myself the Federal Republic's arrangements for the transition from school to work during a visit there in 1983.

South African Sports Office (Director)

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Employment if Her Majesty's Government have granted a work permit to Mr. E. Barlow, the director of the South African sports office, in London.

Mr. Alan Clark: The Department has not granted a work permit for Mr. Barlow in this capacity.

Employment Service

Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Employment whether he has approved the proposals for the development of the employment service recently agreed by the Manpower Services Commission; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. King: I have today replied to the chairman of the Commission endorsing the proposals which were agreed at the commission's meeting on 13 December.

The Government welcome the detailed proposals which have now been agreed following widespread consultation and which are in line with the paper put to the commission in November, a copy of which is in the Library. They are designed to meet the aim, which the Government and the Commission share, of maintaining an effective, efficient and economical public Employment Service which meets the needs of employers and jobseekers in today's labour market. The commission will now be pressing ahead with plans for implementing the proposals.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Travellers' Allowances (EC)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he has received any representations from Northern Ireland in support of uniform travellers' allowances for day trips across national borders within the European Economic Community.

Mr. Rifkind: No.

Mr. Richard Burke (EC Commission)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) if the Government representative at the recent EEC Council of Ministers meeting supported the appointment of Mr. Richard Burke as a Vice-President of the European Economic Community Commission;

(2) (a) how many working days Mr. Richard Burke can serve as a Vice-President of the EEC Commission, (b) what is his increase in annual salary and (c) what effect this appointment has on his pension rights.

Mr. Rifkind: The EC merger treaty (1967) provides that, in the event of retirement or death, vice-presidents of the Commission shall be replaced for the remainder of their term of office by common accord of the Governments of the member states. In accordance with these provisions, the Presidency of the Council nominated Mr. Burke, and his appointment went through unopposed.

The effect of Mr. Burke's appointment on his remuneration and pension rights can only be calculated applying complex rules to his individual case. When the necessary information has been obtained, I shall write to the right hon. Member.

Turkey

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs when he last paid an official visit to Turkey; and when he next proposes to visit Turkey.

Mr. Rifkind: As announced on 14 December my right hon. and learned Friend intends to pay an official visit to Turkey from 11-13 February. This will be his first such visit.

Cyprus

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if the United Kingdom, being a guarantor power for Cyprus, has been notified formally of the recent gesture by the Turkish Cypriot community to encourage a settlement in Cyprus; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: We have been in close touch with the United Nations Secretary-General throughout the series of proximity talks on Cyprus which culminated in his most welcome announcement of a high level meeting between the leaders of both communities to take place on the 17 January.

Hong Kong

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on his recent visit to Hong Kong.

Mr. Luce: During his visit to Hong Kong from 20-21 December, my right hon. and learned Friend accompanied the Prime Minister on several of her engagements. This gave him an opportunity to meet unofficial Members of the Executive and Legislative Councils as well as community and business representatives. In addition he attended a meeting of the Executive Council in Hong Kong and was briefed on developments around Victoria harbour.

Mr. Kilroy-Silk asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs (1) what is the number of (a) men, (b) women, (c) young persons and (d) juveniles in prison in Hong Kong at the latest available date;

(2) what is the longest period of time served in custody on remand by a person currently remanded in prison in Hong Kong;

(3) what is the number of (a) men, (b) women, (c) young persons and (d) juveniles on remand in custody in Hong Kong at the latest available date;

(4) what is the number of mentally disordered persons in prison in Hong Kong (a) on remand and (b) sentenced;

(5) if he is satisfied with conditions in penal establishments in Hong Kong; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Luce [pursuant to his answer, 20 December 1984, c. 295]: The following is the information.

As at 17 December 1984 there were 4,892 men, 134 women and 357 young persons aged 14-20 (348 male and nine female) in prison in Hong Kong. Offenders below the age of 14 are not sentenced to penal institutions.

As at 17 December 1984 the longest period of time served in custody by a person currently on remand in Hong Kong was 327 days.

As at the same date, there were 428 men, 12 women and 62 young persons aged 14-20 (59 male and three female) in custody on remand in Hong Kong. Thirty eight boys and 21 girls under the age of 14 were on remand in homes run by the Social Welfare Department.

As at 17 December 1984, there were eight mentally disturbed persons in custody on remand in Hong Kong and 146 such persons serving sentences in correctional institutions.

The conditions in penal establishments in Hong Kong are satisfactory. Accommodation for prisoners is planned according to United Nations standards.

Libya (Detainees)

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if he will make a statement on the British detainees now held in Libya.

Mr. Luce: We are continuing to use every available channel to secure the early release of the four British detainees. We are in close touch with their families and with the Archbishop of Canterbury whose personal representative, Mr. Terry Waite, is now in Libya. The release of the detainees would be a welcome and constructive development.

Plasma Technology (Visit)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps he has taken, following Mr. Jack Lacey's visit to Plasma Technology, to ensure that United States authorities are aware of Her Majesty's Government's views on United States officials visiting firms in the United Kingdom on official business, without first informing and seeking the approval of the United Kingdom Government.

Mr. Rifkind: There are no restrictions on visits by United States officials to British companies on official business, provided they keep within British law; they need not inform or seek our approval. However, the United States authorities are aware of our view that United States officials should visit firms in the United Kingdom for the purpose of investigating possible breaches of United States laws only with the agreement of the appropriate United Kingdom Government Department.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing Investment Programme

16. Mr. Pike asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to increase the housing investment programme allocations for the current year.

Mr. Gow: No. The resources available for investment in 1984-85 have already been allocated in full.

35. Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he expects to announce the housing investment programme allocation for 1985-86; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Gow: I refer the hon. Member to my reply to the hon. Member for Staffordshire, South-East (Mr. Lightbrown) on 18 December 1984 at column 92. Local authorities were informed of their HIP allocations on 20 December 1984.

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what has been the national allocation for local authority housing investment programmes for each year since 1965; what has been the number of council houses built each year since then; and what are the estimates for both of these services for 1985.

Mr. Gow: Housing investment programme (HIP) allocations were first made for 1978-79. Details of the allocations for authorities in England for each year since then, together with the number of council houses completed, are shown as follows. The Department has made no estimate of the number of completions in 1985-86.

	*HIP allocations (£ million cash)	Council house completions (excluding New Towns)
1978-79	2,484	76,494
1979-80	2,544	70,017
1980-81	2,199	65,390
1981-82†	1,786	39,701
1982-83†	1,875	26,901
1983-84†	1,801	28,151
1984-85†	1,853	‡19,621
1985-86†	1,600	—

*The initial total available for allocation in each year is as shown. A number of changes were made subsequently in some years.

†Since 1981-82, local authorities have been able to supplement their basic HIP allocations by the prescribed proportion of their capital receipts.

‡Provisional figures from April to November 1984 only.

Housing Defects Act 1984

17. Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has any plans to increase funds available to local authorities in connection with the implementation of the Housing Defects Act 1984.

Mr. Gow: Resources for investment in housing by local authorities have been decided in the light of their obligations under the Housing Defects Act. For housing investment programme allocations, we have introduced an indicator in the generalised needs index reflecting the need for expenditure on prefabricated reinforced concrete houses, including those in private ownership; and special needs for expenditure of this type have also been taken into account, where appropriate, through the local discretionary element.

Local Government Bill

18. Mr. Madden asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will publish all the representations he has now received in response to the publication of the Local Government Bill.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: No. It is for those making representations to decide whether to make their views more widely known.

Rates

19. Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the average increase in rates for 1985-86.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The average increase in rates will depend on local authorities' own budget decisions. If authorities budget at target the average increase should be in low single figures.

32. Mr. Allen McKay asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he has made any estimate of the average increase in domestic rates following his announcement of the rate support grant settlement for 1985-86.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The average increase in domestic rates will depend on local authorities' own budget decisions.

House Building (Land Supplies)

20. Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what action he plans to take to help local authorities which have no more land available for building new houses.

Mr. Macfarlane: My Department issued advice on the supply of land for housing last July, in circular 15/84. The circular emphasises the role of structure and local plans in making provision for future housing requirements. It stresses the need to make full use of urban sites and to recycle urban land.

Block Grant

21. Mr. Barron asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what sum will be available in 1985-86 for distribution as block grant to local authorities; and how this compares with the current financial year.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: If the House approves shortly the main rate support grant report for 1985-86 and the second supplementary report for 1984-85, block grant in the next financial year will be £8,480 million compared with £8,168 million this year.

Rate Support Grant

22. Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many local authorities have made direct representations to him about the 1985-86 rate support grant settlement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I have received at least 18 written representations directly from local authorities. In addition, several more have been passed to me by hon. Members.

London Docklands Development Corporation

23. Mr. Spearing asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is satisfied with the liason between the London Docklands Development Corporation and voluntary organisations in their areas within the London borough of Newham.

Sir George Young: Yes.

Rate-capping

24. Mr. Bermingham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what discussions he has so far undertaken with the authorities designated under the Rates Act 1984.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: None of the selected authorities applied for a redetermination of its expenditure level. Selected authorities have until 15 January to comment on the proposed rate and precept limits my right hon. Friend announced on 11 December.

System-built Tower Blocks

25. Mr. Corbett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the latest estimate he has of the cost of repairing structural and other faults in system-built tower blocks.

Sir George Young: No figures which relate specifically to system-built tower blocks are supplied to the Department by local authorities.

Birmingham (Urban Aid)

26. Mr. Beaumont-Dark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he will have further meetings with the city of Birmingham to discuss the matter of urban aid.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: I will do so when I chair the next partnership committee meeting on 25 January.

GLC (Green Belt)

27. Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what administrative arrangements he proposes to make to facilitate the transfer of the Greater London council's green belt holdings to the London boroughs under the Local Government Bill.

Mr. Macfarlane: The transfer of the GLC's interests in this land will be no different from the transfer of other property, that is by an order or orders to be made in due course under clause 92 of the Local Government Bill.

Prefabricated Concrete Homes (Mortgages)

28. Mr. Chope asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress of discussions between his Department and the Building Societies Association relating to the future mortgageability of prefabricated reinforced concrete homes designated under the Housing Defects Act 1984.

Sir David Price asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether his Department has now concluded its discussions with the National House Building Council to establish agreed standards of repairs to the various types of prefabricated reinforced concrete dwellings designated under the Housing Benefits Act 1984.

Mr. Gow: I hope to be able to make an announcement shortly.

Green Belt Land (Planning Applications)

29. Mr. Chapman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he is satisfied with legislation and procedures relating to planning applications on sites in the metropolitan green belt.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Yes.

Thames Water Authority

30. Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the anticipated increase in costs this year to Thames water authority consumers.

Mr. Macfarlane: The increases in Thames water charges for 1985-86 will be determined only when the authority fixes its budget, probably in mid-February, but I expect the increases to be less than 10 per cent.

British Boxing Board of Control

31. Mr. Tom Cox asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he last met the officers of the British Boxing Board of Control; and what subjects were discussed.

Mr. Macfarlane: I last met the officers of the British Boxing Board of Control on 22 July 1982. We discussed the British Medical Association's proposals to campaign for the abolition of boxing.

Local Government Reform

33. Mr. Boyes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what representations he has received following publication of the Local Government Bill in connection with the estimated costs of abolishing the metropolitan county councils and the Greater London council.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: I continue to receive a number of submissions commenting on various aspects of our abolition proposals.

Nuclear Waste

34. Mr. Foulkes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent discussions he has had with British Nuclear Fuels Ltd. on the discharge of nuclear waste.

Mr. Gow: I refer the hon. Member to the reply given to the hon. Member for Copeland (Dr. Cunningham) by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment on 18 December 1984 at column 93-94.

Marine Nature Reserves

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what progress has been made with plans to establish seven marine nature reserves as designated under the Wildlife and Countryside Act; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Waldegrave: Progress on each of the seven sites identified by the Nature Conservancy Council for possible designation as marine nature reserves is as follows:

(i) Isles of Scilly.

Following adverse criticism from the Isles of Scilly sea fisheries committee of the original proposals, the Nature Conservancy Council decided to link them with action on the overall Isles of Scilly comprehensive land use and community development project sponsored by the Duchy of Cornwall and the council of the Isles of Scilly.

(ii) Lundy.

The original proposals having been rejected by the Devon sea fisheries committee in October 1984, the Nature Conservancy Council is currently considering what alternative approach is feasible.

(iii) Skomer.

Non-statutory consultation with interested bodies is at present in progress on the Nature Conservancy Council's proposals.

(iv) Menai Strait.

Preparatory work prior to the start of non-statutory consultation is virtually complete.

(v) Bardsey and Western Lleyn.

Preparatory work is in progress.

(vi) St. Abbs.

Preparatory work is in progress.

(vii) Loch Sween.

Preparatory work is in progress.

I am concerned about the problems over making progress and am considering what more might be done.

Local Government Superannuation Scheme

Mr. Jackson asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his present position with regard to the proposal that part-time employees should participate in his local government superannuation scheme.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: The Government have a long-standing commitment to make regulations allowing local authority part-time employees into the local government superannuation scheme. In the present climate, however, we have been reluctant to impose on local authorities the additional costs which they will have to bear by way of employers' contributions to the pension funds when the regulations are made. We have recognised that there will be compensating savings, both direct and indirect, in the longer term; but it has still been necessary to find ways of reducing or eliminating the immediate extra cost arising from the proposals.

Accordingly, I now propose that the regulations giving part-time employees who work for 15 to 30 hours per week the option of joining the pension scheme should also provide that all employees who are given this option will lose their eligibility for a gratuity in respect of future service. This should ensure that the overall savings which local authorities might be expected to achieve from the outset should broadly equal their additional contributions. I have therefore decided to proceed with the preparation and drafting of combined regulations on this basis.

Because of the extensive consultations that will be necessary, it would not be realistic to expect the regulations to be made before April 1986. However, in view of the inconvenience which the delay in announcing a decision about the proposals has caused to the employees who will be affected and to their employers, I am prepared to authorise local authorities who wish to bring eligible part-time employees into the pension scheme in advance of the regulations to do so, on the clear understanding that there will be no compensating increase in targets or Exchequer grants.

My right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for Scotland will be putting in hand the preparation of corresponding regulations for Scotland.

County Boundaries

Mr. Wiggin asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if the Boundary Commission for England has consulted local authorities about a review of the county boundaries;

(2) if inquiries have been made of hon. Members by the Boundary Commission for England in respect of the review of county boundaries.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: The Local Government Boundary Commission for England wrote on 6 June 1984 to non-metropolitan county councils, district councils and parish councils, and asked whether changes were considered desirable in the county. The purpose was to seek aid in formulating a programme for the reviews of counties, which the Commission is obliged to undertake by section 48(1) of the Local Government Act 1972. Hon. Members for constituencies in the areas concerned, and other persons who may be interested, will be informed when the commission undertakes a review: the timing of particular reviews is at the commission's discretion.

International Garden Festival

Mr. Parry asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the latest situation concerning the site of the international garden festival.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: Negotiations between the Merseyside Development Corporation and Liverpool city council about the future of the international garden festival site are still taking place. Both sides are committed to retaining the 45-acre riverside park, promenade, festival hall and arena for long-term public use and the current negotiations concern the mechanism by which this can best be achieved.

In addition, for 1985, the MDC is finalising plans to open substantial parts of the remainder of the original festival site not immediately required for development.

I expect an announcement very soon.

Palace of Westminster

Mr. Sayeed asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the annual cost over the last five years of (a) internal and (b) external repairs and maintenance of the Palace of Westminster as a percentage of total Government spending.

Mr. Macfarlane: The total expenditure on repairs and maintenance on the parliamentary estate over the last five years has been:

	£ million
1979-80	3·044
1980-81	3·386
1981-82	4·153
1982-83	7·013
1983-84	6·485

Separate accounts are not kept for the Palace of Westminster alone, nor can internal and external work be separately distinguished. These amounts are all less than 0·01 per cent. of total Government spending in the year in question.

Isle of Dogs

Mr. Mikardo asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give a breakdown of how many of the jobs in the enterprise zone in the Isle of Dogs have been transferred from other locations; and how many of the jobs in the enterprise zone have been newly created.

Sir George Young: The consultants who monitored economic activity in the zones reported that up to 31 May 1983 a net total of 77 firms had been established in the Isle of Dogs enterprise zone, employing 353 people. Of these, 186 were in jobs in new firms and 124 were in firms relocated from elsewhere; the origins of 20 firms, comprising 43 jobs were unknown.

The consultants also estimated that in the period 1 June to 31 December 1983 a further 451 jobs were established in the zone but I do not have any information as to what proportion of these jobs were in new firms.

South African Sports Centre (Director)

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what guidance Her Majesty's Government have given to the Sports Council regarding discussions and contact with Mr. E. Barlow at the South African sports office.

Mr. Macfarlane: The policy of Her Majesty's Government and the Sports Council is to support the Commonwealth statement on apartheid in sport and to discourage sporting contacts with South Africa. I have given no specific guidance regarding Mr. Barlow, but the Sports Council will act in accordance with its and the Government's policy.

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if the Minister in his Department with special responsibility for sport has met Mr. E. Barlow, the director of the South African sports office, in London; and if he has any plans to meet Mr. Barlow.

Mr. Macfarlane: No.

Local Government Reform

Mr. Fatchett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will provide a separate breakdown in respect of each of the following metropolitan county councils, West Yorkshire, Greater Manchester, Merseyside, South Yorkshire, West Midlands, and Tyne and Wear, of the gross and net savings he estimates will accrue from their abolition.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: This information is not available. For details of the savings estimates I refer the hon. Member to the answer I gave to my hon. Friend the Member for Surbiton (Mr. Tracey) on 30 November at column 611.

Urban Aid

Mr. Freeman asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what criteria his Department will use to allocate urban aid in the fiscal year 1985-86; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Urban programme grant is allocated to local authorities in recognition of the special social need which exists in their areas, and according to guidelines set by Ministers. In 1985-86 resources will continue to be concentrated in areas of greatest need, taking account of the availability of alternative means of meeting those needs, and of the quality of programmes and projects put forward for support.

Water Authorities

Mr. Nicholas Baker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will introduce legislation to provide direct election of members of water authorities.

Mr. Macfarlane: No.

Mr. Thurnham asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what methods are used to measure the efficiency of water authorities; if he will produce a table showing how each authority in England compares in efficiency; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macfarlane: Water authorities produce an extensive series of performance indicators each year, based on agreed standard definitions. The latest series may be found in authorities' 1983-84 annual reports, copies of which have been placed in the Library. For further information, I refer my hon. Friend to the statement made by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Construction on 10 December 1984 in reply to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Langbaurgh (Mr. Holt) at column 396, when he reported the performance of English water authorities against their 1983-84 performance aims.

Water (Fluorine Content)

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is the source of the compounds of fluorine used to fluoridate the public water supply; how much is used per year; if there is any import content; what is the cost of the compound; and on whose Vote the cost falls.

Mr. Macfarlane: The compounds of fluorine used to fluoridate water supplies are manufactured by the chemical industry from natural mineral sources. Approximately 1,500 tonnes of hexafluorosilicic acid, which contains 16 per cent. fluorine, are used per year at an ex-works cost of about £83 per tonne. Approximately 200 tonnes of imported disodium hexfluorosilicate, which contains 60 per cent. fluorine, are used per year at a cost of about £180 per tonne. The cost of the compounds is borne on the Department of Health and Social Security Vote.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment who are the known suppliers of the fluorine compounds referred to in clause 1(4) of the Water (Fluoridation) Bill.

Mr. Macfarlane: The main suppliers of hexafluorosilicic acid are Norsk Hydro Fertilisers Ltd. Currently the main suppliers of disodium hexafluorosilicate are Chemical and Feeds Ltd.

Council Houses (Repairs)

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what proportion of total council house rents in England was spent on repairs in the years 1982-83 and 1983-84.

Sir George Young: Local authorities fund repair and maintenance of their housing stock out of both capital and current accounts. Expenditure on repairs funded from capital is not identified separately from expenditure on improvement and conversion work. Current expenditure on repairs and maintenance represented 32·1 per cent. of net rental income in 1982-83 and 36·5 per cent. in 1983-84.

Greater London Council (Research Library)

Mr. Simon Hughes asked the Secretary of State for the Environment whether he is yet in a position to announce his plans for the future of the Greater London council research library in the event of the abolition of the Greater London council; and if he will make a statement.

Sir George Young: No decision has yet been taken on the future of the Greater London research library.

Housing Starts

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many council housing starts are planned for 1985.

Sir George Young: The Department has made no such estimate.

Housing Defects Act

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment (1) if Her Majesty's Government will take steps to underwrite a warranty scheme for homes covered by the Housing Defects Act;

(2) if any progress has been made on an approved warranty scheme for homes covered by the Housing Defects Act.

Mr. Gow: I hope to be able to make an announcement shortly.

Water (Fluoride Ion Content)

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list the water authorities which increase the fluoride ion content of all or part of the public water supply in England, Wales and Scotland.

Mr. Macfarlane: The Anglian, Northumbrian, North West, Severn-Trent, Thames, Yorkshire and Welsh water authorities increased the fluoride ion content of some of the public water supplies in their areas.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what recent medical research evidence he considered before introducing the Water (Fluoridation) Bill.

Mr. John Patten: I have been asked to reply.

I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Group of Eight

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment when he next plans to meet the Group of Eight to discuss construction matters.

Mr. Gow: My right hon. Friend and I hope to meet the Group of Eight next month.

Unfit Dwellings

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment to what factors he attributes the increase between 1980 and 1984 of unfit dwellings indicated in his reply to the hon. Member for Macclesfield (Mr. Winterton) on 21 December, Official Report, columns 402-3.

Sir George Young: The figures quoted—an increase from 3·1 per cent. to 3·2 per cent. — are based on assessments by individual local authorities. The Department is not aware of any general factors which would account for the modest difference between the 1980 and 1984 figures.

High-rise Tower Blocks

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will give details of numbers, districts and regions where high-rise tower blocks have been sold to (a) tenants, (b) housing associations and (c) the private sector.

Sir George Young: The Secretary of State's specific consent to the disposal of tower blocks is normally required only where the property is tenanted, or where the freehold is to be conveyed to a management company formed of the occupants. No disposals of the latter kind have involved tower blocks. Nine tenanted blocks, comprising 1,050 flats, were conveyed to the Stockbridge Village Trust in April 1983.

Information about the disposal of vacant blocks is not readily available because such disposals do not normally require my right hon. Friend's specific consent. My Department is however conducting research studies of some of these disposals and I will write to the hon. Member about this work.

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many of the dwellings in excess of households are accounted for by second homes and homes unfit for occupation, respectively.

Sir George Young: In England in 1981 there were estimated to be some 160,000 permanent second homes and some 1·12 million unfit dwellings. The figure for second homes is based on a sample survey conducted by Audits of Great Britain Ltd; that for unfit dwellings from the "English House Condition Survey 1981", part 1.

Airports

Mr. Adley asked the Secretary of State for the Environment to what criteria he gives priority in determining planning applications for new airports and for airport developments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Macfarlane: Planning applications for all types of airport development are considered on their merits. The factors taken into account will vary according to the scale and type of development in question.

They will usually include the impact on the environment, and it is often necessary to weigh any adverse effects environmental or otherwise against the positive aspects of the public interest in the development.

NATIONAL FINANCE

United States Government Officials (Visits)

Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many incidents he is aware of apart from the visit of Mr. Jack Lacey to Plasma Technology, where United States Government officials have visited companies within the United Kingdom on official business without first informing, and seeking the agreement of, the United Kingdom Government.

Mr. Hayhoe: Her Majesty's Customs and Excise have been generally aware that the United States Customs attachés based at the American embassy in London make visits to companies within the United Kingdom from time to time. The United States authorities are, however, now aware of Her Majesty Government's view that United States Customs attachés should obtain the agreement of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise before visiting companies in the United Kingdom about possible breaches of United States law.

Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will list the number of visits made by officials from (a) the United States Department of Commerce, and (b) the United States Customs of which he has been advised or which have been requested by the United States since the beginning of 1983.

Mr. Hayhoe:
(a) Six.
(b) None.

E C Supplementary Budget

Mr. Patrick Thompson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement about the implementation of the inter-governmental agreement for additional finance for the European Communities' 1984 supplementary budget.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Community's need for the United Kingdom's contribution is now urgent and the Government have therefore decided to seek Parliament's approval for payment of £119·218 million as quickly as possible. As has since been confirmed by the High Court and the Court of Appeal, the laying of a draft section 1(3) order in November was an appropriate and lawful procedure for seeking Parliament's authority for the payment. Although the Government believe that the use of section 1(3) to provide for a payment made in 1985 remains lawful, in order to enable payment to be made as soon as possible and for the avoidance of doubt since the IGA refers to payment in 1984, they propose to seek parliamentary authority for the payment of £119·218 million by means of a Supplementary Estimate which is being presented today.

A special Consolidated Fund Bill will be introduced shortly.

Economic Indices

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) whether he will circulate in the Official

Report a table showing for each quarter since 1 January 1973 the percentage increase in the money supply, domestic credit expansion, wholesale prices, retail prices, gross domestic product and the real money supply;

(2) whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing for each quarter since the beginning of 1977 the percentage increase in the money supply and the percentage increase in retail prices two years later.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No. The Official Report is not a statistical abstract. The hon. Member's attention has, on numerous occasions, been drawn to the publications in which such information as is available may be found.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish in the Official Report a table showing in index form the changes in the money supply, velocity of circulation, prices and output between 1979 and the latest available date, in each case; and whether these economic indices have performed as he expected at that time.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The information requested on past behaviour can be derived from Economic Trends, tables 8, 42 and 52. The assumptions for output and prices on which policy has been based, and the target ranges for monetary growth, have been set out in successive versions of the MTFS.

Stamp Duty

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how much revenue has been raised from stamp duty on property in 1984.

Mr. Moore: Information is available only for the period January to October 1984. The provisional figure for stamp duty raised on land and property, (other than stocks and shares) in that period is £370 million.

Public Sector Employees

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was (a) the total figure for United Kingdom public sector employment and (b) the figure for each principle Government Department in 1983 and 1984; and what percentage of the total employed labour force was represented by the public sector in each of those years.

Mr. Hayhoe: No figures are yet available for public sector employment in 1984. Figures for 1983 as at the middle of the year can be found on page 101 of the March 1984 edition of Economic Trends. Numbers of staff at 1 July 1983 and 1984 in principal Government Departments can be found in summaries of the "Civil Service Quarterly Staff Returns". All these documents are available in the House of Commons Library.

Workplace Nurseries

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what advice the Inland Revenue gave to the Equal Opportunities Commission concerning the taxability of workplace nursery benefits;

(2) what advice the Inland Revenue has given to the Consumers' Association in relation to the taxation of workplace nurseries; and on what date the advice was given.

Mr. Moore: The Equal Opportunities Commission wrote to the Board of Inland Revenue on 2 February 1983 to ask whether the advice in its manual "Setting-Up a Workplace Nursery" was correct. The board replied on 17 February explaining the proper tax treatment of employer subsidised nurseries in the hands of directors and those employees currently earning at a rate of £8,500 a year or more. The Inland Revenue have no record of having given any previous advice. Similar advice was given to the Consumers' Association on 24 November 1983 when an error in the "Which: Tax Guide" came to the board's attention.

Mrs. Clwyd asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what steps the Inland Revenue takes to ensure that local tax officers' interpretation of the law relating to the taxability of workplace nurseries reflect the advice being issued by central departments of the Revenue.

Mr. Hayhoe: The Board of Inland Revenue regularly issues advice and guidance to local tax offices on the correct tax treatment of various items as the need arises.

Mr. Rooker asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what would be the current level for taxation of workplace nurseries and other benefits in kind if the level of 1948 had been maintained in real terms.

Mr. Lawson: If the 1948-49 earnings threshold for assessing benefits in kind in the hands of employees had been maintained by reference to movements in the Index of Retail Prices, it would now be about £22,500.

Value Added Tax

Mr. Wiggin asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer to what rate value added tax could be lowered and produce the same yield if all exemptions to the tax were removed.

Mr. Hayhoe: About 9 per cent. if the tax was levied on all items of consumers' expenditure except rates, other statutory charges and certain sevices for which there would be practical difficulties.

Mr. Gregory asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what estimated revenue would be obtained in a full year from introducing value added tax at a rate of 25 per cent. on each of the goods which were formerly taxed at the 25 per cent. rate under purchase tax, broken down by the former categories used for that purpose.

Mr. Hayhoe: It is estimated that levying value added tax at 25 per cent. on all items which were subject to purchase tax at 25 per cent. in 1972-73 (its last year of operation) would yield net additional revenue at 1984-85 prices of about £1,800 million in a full year. However, I regret that insufficient information is available on which to base a breakdown of this estimate into the detailed categories of goods used formerly for purchase tax purposes. The estimate includes value added tax on cars and motor cycles, which are now subject to an additional charge (car tax) introduced with value added tax to maintain a level of taxation comparable to that under purchase tax.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many representations he has now received against any introduction of value added tax on (a) newspapers, (b) books and periodicals, (c) children's shoes and (d) children's clothes; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Hayhoe: The approximate number of representations which have been received by Treasury Ministers on the topics mentioned is as follows:

(a) and (b) 900
(c) 320
(d) 40

£1 Note

Mr. Favell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what assessment he made, before deciding to discontinue the £1 note, of the extra costs that would arise to users from the switch to the £1 coin; if he will set out his assessment of these costs by category; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It is impractical to make a precise calculation of the relative advantages and disadvantages to specific sectors for many reasons, including the likelihood of behavioural changes following the discontinuation of the note. However, many interests outside central Government who might be involved in cash handling on any scale were consulted.

Mr. Favell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what additional transport costs will arise from the discontinuance of the £1 note relating to the transport from the Mint to the banks of additional £1 coins; who will bear these costs; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Transport costs of maintaining the £1 unit will be reduced as a result of replacing the £1 note with a £1 coin. Although the cost of transporting a given quantity of £1 coins is greater than the cost of transporting an equivalent value of £1 notes, the notes need replacing very frequently.

Mr. Favell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what is the weight of £10,000 worth of new £1 notes; and what is the corresponding weight of the same sum in £1 coins.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The weight of £10,000 in new notes is 7·31 kilograms; the weight of the same value in coins is 95 kilograms.

Mr. Favell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what are the implications for staffing levels in the relevant production departments of the switch from £1 notes to £1 coins.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Following the introduction of the £1 coin the Bank of England has pursued a policy of minimal replacement of staff leaving its printing works. Natural wastage has, therefore, accounted for a large part of the staff reduction which will be consequent upon ceasing to issue the £1 note. Combined with early pension and voluntary severance arrangements it is anticipated that staff reductions will be achieved without the need for compulsory redundancy.

It is not possible precisely to forecast future annual demand for the £1 coin after the initial stage of bulk replacement has taken place, but the direct effect of staffing levels is expected to be negligible.

Mr. Favell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many £1 notes were issued in each of the last five years; and how many £1 coins were issued in 1983 and 1984, respectively.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Issues of £1 units over the last five years were as follows:

	Notes (millions)	Coins (millions)
1980	928	—
1981	795	—
1982	746	—
1983	659	171
1984	744	42

Mr. Favell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many man hours are required to produce (a) a £1 note and (b) a £1 coin.

Mr. Ian Stewart: It takes 0·25 man hours to produce 1000 £1 notes from the receipt of bank notepaper up to but not including final distribution. The corresponding production time for 1000 £1 coins is 0·13 man hours. Because of the need for much more frequent replacement, the note is more expensive to distribute.

Mr. Favell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what costs in terms of new or adapted machinery have been incurred for the production of £1 coins in each financial year to date.

Mr. Ian Stewart: No machinery has been purchased or adapted specifically for production of £1 coins.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will consider extending the deadline for printing £1 notes.

Mr. Ian Stewart: The Bank of England has ceased to print £1 notes in line with the announcement made by my right hon. Friend the Chancellor of the Exchequer in his autumn statement that issue of £1 notes would cease after 31 December.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will consider introducing a higher denomination note, such as a £2·50 note, to replace the £1 note.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many representations he has received in favour of keeping the £1 note to date.

Mr. Ian Stewart: About 1,350 letters have been received to date in response to the decision to cease issuing £1 notes. Most of them are critical of the decision in one way or another, although many of these concentrate on aspects of the £1 coin rather than the note.

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he has any views on the possibility of some clearing banks producing their own £1 notes.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Thurnham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to include in the next "Economic Progress Report", a chart comparing actual unemployment figures with the figures for the relevant period predicted by independent forecasters and the assumptions for the relevant period provided by the Government to the Government Actuary.

Mr. Peter Rees: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

EC Budget

Mr. Spearing asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will tabulate in the Official Report the expenditure of the European Economic Communities for 1984 authorised prior to the introduction of supplementary budget No. 1, together with the expenditure authorised by that budget, for each main purpose and under subheadings of obligatory and non-obligatory expenditure, respectively.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Basic and Social Infrastructure

Mr. Rooker asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how he measures the rate of return on (a) basic infrastructure and (b) social infrastructure.

Mr. Peter Rees: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Construction Industry

Mr. Rooker asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the contribution of the construction industry to the economy in respect of gross domestic product, employment, exports and tax revenue, including building materials producers where appropriate; and how the position compares with five and 10 years previously.

Mr. Peter Rees: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

High Technology Exports

Mr. Ashdown asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many requests he has received since the beginning of 1982 from the United States authorities for legal action to be taken against firms or individuals in the United Kingdom in relation to high technology exports; and how many have resulted in positive actions by his Department.

Mr. Hayhoe: None.

Books (Prosecutions)

Mr. Dobson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many prosecutions have been mounted by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise since 1979 against books listed in the edition of British Books in Print current at the time of prosecution.

Mr. Hayhoe: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

"British Books in Print"

Mr. Dobson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer to which editions of British Books in Print the Minister of State's letter of 20 December to the hon. Member for Holborn and St. Pancras refers; and when the book was bought or borrowed by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise.

Mr. Hayhoe: My letter of 20 December to the hon. Member referred to the 1984 edition of British Books in Print. The book which was consulted by the staff concerned had been bought by the library of Her Majesty's Customs and Excise in October 1984.

Occupational Pension Schemes

Mr. Galley asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information about individual occupational pension schemes is held by the superannuation funds office.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 17 December 1984, c. 66]: The superannuation funds office holds information received by the Board of Inland Revenue concerning pension schemes seeking tax approval under chapter II, part II, Finance Act 1970. This information includes the deed constituting the scheme, current rules, number of members, identity of the administrator and particulars of the employer. Additional information, including particulars of investments, is held for self-administered schemes with fewer than 12 members. In some cases the office holds information relevant to the tax affairs of individual members and employers.

The office also holds information in respect of retirement annuity contracts approved for the purposes of retirement annuity relief.

Gross Domestic Product

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what percentage of the gross domestic product was represented by taxation, including national insurance contributions and local authority rates in 1984; and whether he will provide a breakdown of the percentage figure between taxes on income, taxes on expenditure, national insurance, capital taxes, stamp duty and rates in 1984 and for each year from 1979 onwards.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 20 December 1984, c. 325]: The information is in the following table.

Percentage of gross domestic product at market prices

Taxation Allowances

Mr. Marlow asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what he estimates would be the cost in 1985-86 of (a) indexing married and single person allowances, (b) increasing married and single personal allowances at twice the rate of inflation, (c) increasing the married man's tax allowance by the rate of inflation, (d) indexing the single person's tax allowance by the rate of inflation and (e) providing a tax allowance to spouses not in receipt of income equal to 10 per cent., 20 per cent., 30 per cent., 50 per cent., 75 per cent. and 100 per cent. of the single person's allowance.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 21 December 1984, c. 359]: Indexation of the main income tax allowances and higher rate thresholds (by 4·75 per cent.) in 1985-86 would have a direct revenue cost of £860 million in 1985-86 (and £1,115 million in a full year) compared to the position if allowances and thresholds remained at 1984-85 levels. The table shows the direct revenue costs of the specified changes (at forecast 1985-86 levels of income) assuming that all other allowances and thresholds remain at their 1984-85 levels. Costs are shown below against the 1984-85 base and the indexed base. The revenue projections in the autumn statement assume revalorisation of the main direct tax allowances and thresholds (and of specific duties) by 4·75 per cent.

Direct revenue costs

	1985-86	Full year	1985-86	Full year

(b) allowances increased by 9·5 per cent.	1,550	1,920	690	805
(c) AM and AAM indexed	440	550	−420	−565
(d) AS, WEIA and AAS indexed	330	410	−530	−705

AM, AAM: ordinary and age allowance for married men.
AS, AAS: ordinary and age allowance for single people.
WEIA: wife's earned income allowance.

(e) The direct revenue costs of increasing the total allowance available to a married couple where the wife has no earned income are estimated to be as follows. All changes are measured on top of indexation (at 1985-86 income levels):

Direct revenue cost

Increase in total allowance £	1985-86 £ million	Full year £ million
210	280	350

Privatised Public Corporations

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing for each of the public corporations privatised in the period 1979 to 1984 (i) the gross proceeds from flotation or sale, (ii) the prior claims on such proceeds to meet contingent liabilities such as underfunded pension schemes, (iii) commissions, fees, advertising expenses etc. paid to merchant bankers and other advisers and (iv) the net proceeds accruing to the Consolidated Fund.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 21 December 1984, c. 357]: The following table gives the information requested in parts (i) and (iv) of the hon. Member's question. Only in the case of the National Freight Company was a payment in respect of a deficiency in pension funds netted off from gross sale receipts; the sum involved was 48·7 million. The total cost of fees and commissions paid to primary underwriters, sub-underwriters, financial advisers, legal advisers, auditors and stockbrokers for each privatisation was given in my earlier reply to the hon. Member on 21 December.

† In addition to sale expenses, the Government subscribed £35 million for new shares issued at the time of sale.

‡ In addition to sale proceeds, a payment in respect of pension funds deficiency of £48·7 million was netted off sale proceeds.

‖ Latest estimate.

¶ Gross proceeds, payable in three tranches. Net proceeds not yet determined.

The sales of Jaguar and Sealink were conducted by BL and British Rail respectively, which retained the sale proceeds.

Mr. Blair asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish an update of the table on shareholdings in privatised public corporations given in reply to the hon. Member for Carrick, Cumnock and Doon Valley (Mr. Foulkes) on 29 July, Official Report, columns 725-8.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 21 December 1984, c. 357.]: The following table gives the information requested. The sale of Jaguar was conducted by BL and the information requested is a matter for the company, not the Government. However I understand that the figures are as given in the table.

	British Aerospace	Cable and Wireless	Amersham International	Britoil	Associated British Ports	Enterprise Oil	¶Jaguar	British Telecom

* A subsequent rights issue (March 1983) not taken up by Government, increased the proportion of Cable and Wireless shares held in the private sector to 55 per cent.
† These figures include shares allocated free to employees, except for Enterprise Oil and Jaguar where no shares were so allocated.
‡ Excludes overseas employees.
A further 2·5 per cent. of total issued share capital was reserved for BL employees, 2·4 per cent. of whom became shareholders holding a further 0·9 per cent. of the share capital.
* The figures for the number of shares allocated to employees do not include shares held in trust for employees under Jaguar's employee share incentive scheme.

Wages

Mr. Ralph Howell asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what was the national average wage in 1979, 1980, 1981, 1982, 1983 and 1984, and the tax threshold for (a) a single person and (b) a married couple; and if he will show (a) and (b) as a percentage of the national average wage for each of those years.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 21 December 1984, c. 357]: The table gives the information requested for the financial years 1978-79 to 1984-85. The figures of average earnings are estimates for full-time males (all occupations) paid at adult rates. Earnings have been assumed to increase by 7½ per cent. between 1983-84 and 1984-85 — the underlying rate of increase assumed by the Government Actuary in his recent report.

		Tax threshold		Tax threshold as a percentage of average earnings
	Average earnings (£ per year)	Single person £	Married man £	Single person Per cent.	Married man Per cent.
1978-79	4,831	985	1,535	20·4	31·8

1983-84	8,892	1,785	2,795	20·1	31·4

Pension Funds

Sir William Clark asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer (1) what amount of extra revenue would accrue to the Exchequer in a full year if (a) lump sum payments to pensioners from pension funds were taxed at the standard rate, (b) employer's contributions to occupational pension funds were disallowed for corporation tax purposes and (c) employee's contributions to occupational pension funds were disallowed for income tax purposes;

(2) if he will estimate the amount of extra revenue which could accrue to the Exchequer if, in the case of occupational pensions (a) employers' contributions were not allowed as a charge against profits, (b) all investment income of occupational pension funds were taxed at the stadard rate, (c) all capital gains of occupational pension funds were taxed at the standard rate, (d) employers' contributions were taxed as a fringe benefit of the employee.

Mr. Moore: The estimates shown below are of the direct revenue effects of the reliefs on tax liabilities in 1984-85, taking the levels of pension contributions, pension fund investment income and pension payments that arise, given the existence of the reliefs. The figures cannot, therefore, be interpreted as indicating the tax yield which might result from a change in the tax rules, as no account has been taken of changes in levels and methods of provision for retirement that might occur following such changes. Each estimate has been calculated independently, and the combined effect of more than one cannot therefore be calculated by summing the figures.

	Full year cost £ million
Employees' contributions to occupational pension schemes allowed as a deduction for income tax purposes	1,250
Employers' contributions to occupational pension schemes allowed as a charge against profits for corporation tax purposes	*†1,600
Employers' contributions not taxed as a benefit in kind of the employee	*†2,100
Investment income of occupational pension funds (assuming tax at the basic rate)	2,500
Lump sum payments to pensioners (assuming tax at the basic rate)	900

* These estimates are particular tentative.
† Alternatives.

I regret that a reliable estimate of the cost of exempting capital gains realised by pension funds is not available.

The revenue that would accrue from abolition of these reliefs would also depend on any transitional provisions, designed to avoid retrospective taxation.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Drugs (Standardisation)

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will set up a departmental feasibility study into the standardisation of presentation of drugs and medications so that, irrespective of the manufacturer, the patient will at all times obtain an identical preparation with a standardised code whenever possible.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. We have no evidence of any need for such a study.

Contraceptive Pill

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what studies he intends to initiate on the correlation of long-term use of the contraceptive pill with breast and cervical cancer.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Many studies are being conducted in this country and abroad on the long-term effects of the contraceptive pill, including possible association with breast and cervical cancer. As the results of these studies start to become available, they are carefully monitored by our Department and by the Committee on Safety of Medicines, in co-operation with regulatory authorities in other countries and with the World Health Organisation. The committee, which advises Ministers on the safety of all medicinal products, keeps the safety of oral contraceptives under constant review.

Dental Treatment

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he intends to take to ensure that patients who receive dental treatment under the National Health Service are given a full statement of the treatment they have and of the costs being claimed by dental practitioners arising from such treatment.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: None. Such a statement would be costly to produce and of little value to the patient.

Child Abuse Offenders

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what provision he intends to make to establish further therapy and counselling services for child abuse offenders.

Mr. John Patten: We are currently reviewing the guidance we have issued to authorities and their agencies on the handling of child abuse cases. As part of that review we shall, together with the Home Office, be considering the provision of therapy and counselling services for child abuse offenders.

Unemployed Patients (Advisory Services)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he plans to establish any special advisory services for unemployed patients admitted to hospitals following heart attacks or unsuccessful attempts at suicide.

Mr. John Patten: No. But I am sending the hon. Member a copy of a report prepared by a multi-disciplinary working party on the management of cases of deliberate self-harm, which we circulated to health authorities last month (circular HN (84)25); we have asked district health authorities to consider reviewing local arrangements for the management of such cases in the light of that report.

Drug Addicts

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make additional funds available to enable centres for the rehabilitation of drug addicts which are presently threatened with closure to remain open.

Mr. John Patten: We are aware of only one centre for the rehabilitation of drug misusers which may be threatened with early closure. The voluntary organisation concerned has made an application for funds to the Department and we will let it know the outcome as soon as possible. More generally, my right hon. and learned Friend announced on 13 December 1984 that a further £3 million will be available centrally—in addition to the £7 million previously made available—to improve services for drug misusers. Such funding is of course only available for a limited period as we normally expect local projects, once established, to attract local funding.

Alcohol Abuse

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what specific steps he intends to take during the next three years to reduce the level of alcohol abuse.

Mr. John Patten: The Government set out their general approach to the problems caused by misuse of alcohol in the discussion document "Drinking Sensibly" published in 1981. This document recognised that attempts to influence the minority who misuse alcohol must, if they are to be realistic, respect the freedom of the majority who use alcohol responsibly. The document concluded that the reduction of alcohol misuse and the harm it causes requires a range of action by central and local government, voluntary and community bodies, the health professions and institutions, business—including the drinks trade—and trade unions.

Within this framework the Department, in conjunction with other bodies such as the Health Education Council, continues to seek better information through surveys and research about the incidence and causes of problem drinking; to encourage health education to lead to healthier life styles, and earlier identification and help for the problem drinker at work; to assist statutory and voluntary action in prevention, treatment and rehabilitation; to influence professional education and to sponsor training initiatives, to alert and equip service providers to intervene earlier, and more effectively, in problem drinking in the course of their everyday work. These activities will be pursued throughout the next three years.

The Department also gives substantial grant aid to Alcohol Concern, the National Agency on Alcohol Misuse, which was formally established in 1984. I understand that this organisation is likely to take on an increasing role in the fields of prevention, training and in improving the network of local voluntary agencies and their collaboration with statutory agencies.

Child Sex Abuse

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what co-operation has taken place between his Department and the National Society for the Prevention of Cruelty to Children in dealing with cases involving child sex abuse and in helping parents found guilty of committing such offences to reintegrate into family life.

Mr. John Patten: We are currently reviewing the procedural guidance we have issued to authorities and agencies on child abuse. Existing guidance—which was last reviewed in 1980—does not specifically address child sexual abuse. As the current review goes forward we shall be consulting the NSPCC and other statutory and voluntary agencies who have developed expertise in the handling of cases of child sexual abuse. These discussions will take place in 1985.

Foot Abnormality and Ailments

Mr. Campbell-Savours asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he will publish for each of the last five years expenditure by the National Health Service on the treatment of non-inherited foot abnormality and ailments.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not collect the specific information requested centrally.

Tinnitus

Sir John Farr asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the number of tinnitus sufferers in the Leicester area.

Mr. John Patten: We do not collect this sort of detailed local information centrally. My hon. Friend may wish to seek information from the chairman of the Leicestershire health authority.

Nurses (Injuries)

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many National Health Service employed nurses lost their jobs as a result of injury sustained at work in each of the last five years;

(2) how many National Health Service employed nurses lost their jobs as a result of back pain or back injury sustained at work in each of the last five years.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not collect this sort of detailed information centrally.

Hospitals (Child Care Facilities)

Mr. Dubs asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many hospitals have child care facilities for staff or patients.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not collected centrally. It is for health authorities to decide what facilities are required locally.

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will place in the Library a copy of the results of his Department's investigations and inquiries which claim to show that in other countries with similar arrangements to the proposed limited list savings have been immediate and worthwhile and no damage has been caused to patient care;

(2) which countries with limited list drug schemes were studied by his Department prior to the announcement of the limited list; and when the studies were started for each country.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We keep abreast of developments worldwide in the provision of drugs by subsidised schemes and we made a particular effort to bring our information up to date last summer. Information was collected on schemes in the following countries: Australia, Austria, Belgium, Canada, Denmark, France, Holland, Ireland, Italy, New Zealand, Norway, Spain, Sweden and Switzerland. Much of the information obtained in the course of inquiries preceding our announcement on 8 November was given in confidence by foreign Governments and it would not be proper for me to disclose it.

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if any savings that arise from any form of limited list will be to the benefit of the National Health Service.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services to what part of the National Health Service he intends to devote any savings which may arise from limited list prescribing.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Limited lists of drugs in certain therapeutic groups are being introduced to restrain the continued high growth in the drugs bill. The estimated savings have been taken into account in the level of spending on the National Health Service for 1985-86 announced at the time of the Autumn Statement.

Mr. Grylls asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will consult Help the Aged, Age Concern, the Sue Ryder Foundation, the Women's National Cancer Control Campaign, the Spastics Society, the Royal Society of Primary Health Care Nursing, the Multiple Sclerosis Society, the National Ankylosing Spondylitis Society, the Marie Curie Memorial Foundation, the National Society for Epilepsy and the Leukaemia Society about his proposed limited list of drugs;

(2) if he will consult the Renal Society, the Royal College of Midwives, the Royal College of Nursing, the Epilepsy Foundation, the District Nursing Association, the National Society for Cancer Relief, the Cancer Aftercare and Rehabilitation Society, the Haemophilia Society, the Ileamostamy Association, the British Red Cross Society, the Leonard Cheshire Foundation, the British Kidney Patient Association, the British Epilepsy Association, the British Diabetic Association, the Back Pain Association, the Arthritis and Rheumatism Council and the Patients' Association, about his proposed limited list of drugs.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I would welcome any comments or suggestions from these organisations on the drugs for inclusion in the final limited list.

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, if a limited list is introduced, whether dispensing general practitioners will be permitted to sell branded products against a private prescription.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to him on 5 December 1984 at column 220. We are still considering this.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list for the last three years for which figures are available the number of prescriptions dispensed for each drug in the therapeutic categories covered by the Government's limited list proposals which are not included in the provisional list circulated with the Chief Medical Officer's letter of 14 December, indicating whether the drug required a prescription;

(2) if he will list the drugs in the therapeutic categories affected by the Government's limited list proposals currently available under National Health Service prescription which are not included in the provisional list circulated with the Chief Medical Officer's letter of 14 December to all doctors, indicating those for which a generic alternative will not be available under prescription under the National Health Service, whether or not a prescription is currently required, and the proportion of current prescriptions for those drugs which are prescribed for people entitled to free prescriptions.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We are presently consulting on the content of the limited list. Until this consultation is complete it will not be possible to start compiling the list of medicines which will no longer be available under the National Health Service. Our stated intention is to ensure that, within the categories of drugs to be included in the limited list, there will be an adequate range of effective drugs sufficient to meet all clinical needs.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many general practitioners have been involved to date in formulating the provisional limited list of drugs circulated with the Chief Medical Officer's letter of 14 December.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: All general practitioners have been invited by the Chief Medical Officer to comment on the provisional limited list of drugs. Some 650 have done so to date.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the introduction of limited list prescribing was recommended in the Binder Hamlyn report on general practice.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The recommendations of the consultants, Binder Hamlyn, will, where appropriate be considered in the forthcoming Green Paper on primary health care. The report did not make detailed recommendations on prescribing.

Drug Companies (Inducements)

Mr. Maclean asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has a policy on the inducements drug companies may reasonably offer to general practitioners to prescribe a particular product.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We support the advice given by the Association of the British Pharmaceutical Industry in its code of practice. This states inter alia that gifts in the form of articles designed as promotional aids, whether related to a particular product or of general utility, may be distributed to members of the medical profession provided the gift is inexpensive and relevant to the practice of medicine.

This is reinforced in the General Medical Council's booklet "Professional Conduct and Discipline: Fitness to Practice" which advises that doctors should avoid accepting any pecuniary or material inducement which might compromise, or be regarded by others as likely to compromise the independent exercise of their professional judgment in prescribing matters.

Drug Companies

Mr. Maclean asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list those companies which received more than £100 million from the National Health Service for drugs supplied to it in the last financial year.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Only the companies comprising the Glaxo group received, in aggregate, more than £100 million in respect of National Health Service medicines.

Portable Pensions

Mr. Freeman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what representations he received on the consultation documentation on personal portable pensions.

Mr. Whitney: The closing date for comments on "Personal Pensions: A Consultative Document" was 30 November. To date the Department has received 100 responses from individuals and 174 from representative bodies and companies.

Medical and Nursing Schools

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidelines he intends to issue to medical and nursing schools about instruction in religious beliefs, cultural patterns and the medical and emotional problems of Asian and other ethnic minorities in the United Kingdom.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: None. These are matters for the General Medical Council as part of its responsibility for issuing recommendations on basic medical education and for the English National Board as part of its responsibility for the training of nurses, midwives and health visitors.

Health Data (Draft Code)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what resources he intends to make available to ensure that disclosure of personal health data is applied strictly according to the health data draft code.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We envisage that health authorities will be able to operate the necessary management arrangements to ensure that disclosures are made only in accordance with the provisions of the code within available resources.

Sterilisation Operations (Failures)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many cases of failed sterilisation operations have occurred during the last three years; and what levels of compensation were paid out to patients involved as a result.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not collect this information centrally.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he intends to take to assess the number of failed sterilisation operations performed on women; and what guidelines he will issue to health authorities as a result.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have no plans to introduce the central collection of statistics on the number of failed sterilisations nor to issue guidance to health authorities.

The success rate of the operation is taken into account by doctors when they explain the procedure to their patients and obtain consent.

NHS Management Board (Personnel Director)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress has been made towards the appointment to the National Health Service management board of a personnel director.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The appointment of a personnel director will be considered by the chairman of the NHS Management Board, who took up post on 1 January 1985.

Asian Mother and Baby Campaign

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what progress has been made in making the National Health Service more accessible to Asian communities resulting from the Asian Mother and Baby campaign initiative launched by his Department in collaboration with the Save the Children Fund.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The campaign has stimulated interest and been widely welcomed, and I took part in the first local launch of a link-worker scheme in Birmingham last month. The scheme will be extended successively to some eight or nine other areas in the course of this year. It is therefore too early to assess its impact, but it is intended to carry out a full evaluation of both the health educational campaign and the link-worker scheme over the next two to three years.

NHS (Notices and Leaflets)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what provisions will be made for printing notices and instruction leaflets in foreign languages in National Heath Service hospitals and clinics for ethnic minority community patients.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: This is primarily a matter for individual health authorities to determine in the light of local needs, although attention was drawn to the need for hospital and clinic signs in the most commonly used community languages in "Providing Effective Health Care in a Multi-racial Society: A checklist for looking at local issues" which was distributed to health authorities by Training in Health and Race. Also the Health Education Council has produced a number of leaflets for members of the ethnic minority communities, particularly in connection with the Stop Rickets and Asian Mother and Baby Campaigns.

Nystagmus

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will take steps to ensure that all National Health Service patients who suffer from nystagmus are aware of the methods of treating it.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Ensuring that a patient who suffers from a disease is appropriately informed about methods of treating it is a task for the patient's doctor.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the average waiting time in National Health Service hospitals for the diagnosis and treatment of nystagmus.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not collect sufficient information centrally to give a reliable estimate.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has offered any guidance to health authorities about the funds they should allocate for the treatment of nystagmus.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We advise health authorities to decide on the allocation of the funds available to them between various specialties on the basis of their own best judgment of local priorities.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) in which cities or regions there are centres of excellence for researching and treating nystagmus;

(2) if he will tabulate in the Official Report the number and names of the research studies into nystagmus during the last ten years.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Facilities for the treatment of nystagmus are available in all neurology and some ophthalmology departments.

I understand the Medical Research Council, the main Government funded body supporting research in this field from its grant-in-aid under the science budget of the Department of Education and Science, have been supporting the following four research studies during the last 10 years:

MRC hearing and balance unit—Nottingham

Electronystagmographic investigation of induced vestibular nystagmus, octokinetic nystagmus, spontaneous nystagmus and disordered eye movements.

Imperial college, London

(i) Objective analysis of vestibular nystagmus.

(ii) Applications of biological signal analysis — analysis of electro cochleograms, auditory — evoked brain stem and cortical E.E.C. responses and perceptual responses to binaural stimuli, objective quantification and interpretation of nystagmus responses to unilateral vestibular stimuli.

University of Manchester—department of ophthalmic optics

Visual perception with congenital nystagmus.

It is open to any researcher to submit an application to the council, which would examine it for scientific merit — applications are not restricted to "centres of excellence".

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of ophthalmic opticians, doctors and research workers in the National Health Service who specialise in testing and researching into nystagmus.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: All ophthalmic opticians are trained in the detection of nystagmus, and all neurologists and ophthalmologists are trained in its detection and treatment. Information about numbers involved in research is not available centrally.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if all ophthalmic opticians in the National Health Service receive special training for the detection and treatment of nystagmus.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: All ophthalmic opticians in the National Health Service are trained in the detection of nystagmus, but their role in treating it is normally confined to the provision of corrective spectacles. When an ophthalmic optician detects nystagmus in a patient, he is required to refer that patient to a doctor.

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is his estimate of the number of adults and the number of children who suffer from nystagmus.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Nystagmus may be a symptom of a number of conditions and it is not, therefore, possible to estimate the number of people who suffer from it.

London Refraction Hospital

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) why one of the clinics at the London Refraction hospital is empty and unused;

(2) what study he has made of the financial position of the London Refraction hospital; and what proposals he has for additional funding.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The London Refraction hospital is not an NHS establishment accountable to us but is operated independently as a registered charity. We have no information, therefore, about the use of clinics at the hospital and we have not made a study of its financial position.

The hospital is paid the usual fee for any NHS sight tests carried out there and may apply for financial assistance for providing refresher training courses for opticians which are relevant to the general opthalmic service. We have no proposals for additional funding.

Pensions (Payments Overseas)

Sir Peter Emery asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many persons who receive payment of their retirement pension have this paid to them overseas; and how much money is involved.

Mr. Whitney: On 31 December 1982, the latest date for which we have firm figures, 289,893 people receiving British retirement pension were living abroad. The cost of paying pensions to them was then about £206 million. It is estimated that this cost has now risen to about £250 million, partly as a result of an increase in the number of pensioners. Later figures are not obtainable owing to the industrial action at Newcastle central office.

NHS Beds (Statistics)

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give a breakdown by region of the number of National Health Service beds which are available for (a) patients undergoing artificial insemination treatment and (b) invitro fertilisation treatment.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Artificial insemination treatment is provided on an outpatient basis. We do not collect information centrally on the number of beds available for invitro fertilisation treatment. It would be unusual for a hospital department to allocate beds exclusively to this one treatment.

Artificial Insemination

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) if he will list all establishments within the United Kingdom which store frozen human spermatozoa; and for what purpose it is stored at each establishment;

(2) if he will list all establishments within the United Kingdom which store frozen living human embryos, how many are stored at each establishment, and for what purpose they are stored;

(3) if he will list all those National Health Service establishments which have plans to provide, but do not yet provide (a) artificial insemination services and (b) invitro fertilisation services;

(4) what were the numbers of (a) spontaneous abortions and (b) induced abortions which have been experienced by women undergoing fertilisation by artificial insemination by (i) husband and (ii) donor in each of the institutions where such techniques have been available under the National Health Service in each of the years since they commenced operation;

(5) if he will list the total expenditure upon artifical insemination treatments under the National Health Service in each of the years since such treatment was introduced; and what percentage of the total National Health Service budget this figure represents in each of those years;

(6) how many doctors are directly involved in the practice of artificial insemination within the National Health Service; and at which of the establishments offering such services they are based;

(7) for each of the establishments, whether National Health Service or private, which use invitro fertilisation techniques (a) from how many women ova have been extracted, (b) how many ova have been successfully fertilised in vitro, (c) how many fertilised ova were re-implanted in the womb of the woman from whom they were taken, (d) how many of the resulting pregnancies developed to full term, (e) how many of those pregnancies which went to full term resulted in stillbirths, (f) how many of those pregnancies which went to full term resulted in the birth of a handicapped child and (g) how many of those pregnancies which did not go to full term were terminated through (i) spontaneous abortion and (ii) induced abortion;

(8) how many doctors are currently involved in the provision of invitro fertilisation services within the National Health Service at each of the establishments where such techniques are used;

(9) what is the estimated total cost to the National Health Service of the birth of one child whose mother was made pregnant as a result of the use of invitro fertilisation techniques;

(10) in how many of the cases of births resulting from the use of in vitro fertilisation techniques the husband of the child's mother was the child's biological father;

(11) how many of those women who have achieved pregnancy by the use of artificial insemination techniques in each of the years since such techniques were first available already had children;

(12) how many of those women who have achieved pregnancy by the use of in vitro fertilisation techniques in each of the years since such techniques were first available already had children.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not collect this detailed information centrally.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) what provision is made for any conscientious objection of National Health Service staff, both medical and non-medical, to being involved in fertilisation of women by artificial insemination;

(2) what provision is made for any conscientious objection of National Health Service staff, either medical or non-medical, to being involved in invitro fertilisation techniques.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: There is no statutory provision, but I am sure that health authorities will respond positively to any requests by staff not to be involved in the care of patients undergoing these forms of treatment.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all those establishments in the United Kingdom where artificial insemination either by donor or by husband is currently carried out; and how many successful pregnancies have been achieved at each of these centres since they commenced operation.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not hold this information centrally. I understand the inquiry into human fertilisation and embryology was told that there are about 35 places in the United Kingdom where an AID service is available.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the total cost of the Warnock committee of inquiry and of the publication of its report.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The estimated cost of the inquiry is £194,000. the costs of publishing its report were borne by Her Majesty's Stationery Office, which will recover them through sales.

Retirement Pension

Sir Peter Emery asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will specify the circumstances in which a person who has lived abroad for over 20 years and who during that time has paid no national insurance contributions is eligible to claim and have paid to him abroad a United Kingdom state retirement pension.

Mr. Whitney: Payment of retirement pension is dependent upon satisfaction of the relevant contribution conditions. A person who has lived abroad for over 20 years, and who during that time paid no national insurance contributions, may be entitled to a reduced basic retirement pension provided he paid, or was credited with, a sufficient number of contributions during the remainder of his working life. United Kingdom retirement pensions are payable to persons living abroad but annual increases are payable only to persons living in a European Community country or in a country with whom there is a reciprocal agreement which provides for benefit increases.

InVitro Fertilisation

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has as to the total numbers of children born as a result of invitro fertilisation in other countries.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We understand that some 400 children have been born in other countries as a result of invitro fertilisation.

Mrs. Ann Winterton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list all those establishments within the United Kingdom where invitro fertilisation techniques are used in the treatment of infertile couples, specifying which are National Health Service establishments.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Leeds, West (Mr. Meadowcroft) at columns 465-466. We do not collect information about private sector facilities for this treatment, but I understand that at least two centres offer it — Bourn Hall clinic, Cambridgeshire and the Cromwell hospital, London.

Private Prescriptions

Dr. Roger Thomas asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether general practitioners are to be allowed to charge a fee when National Health Service patients request private prescriptions for medications in the eight groups of drugs not listed as available for prescribing on Form E.C.10; and what will be the range of charges permitted to be added to the costs of medications by pharmacists supplying these medications listed on such private prescriptions.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We are still considering these matters and consulting with the professions about them.

Constipation

Mr. Latham asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proposals he has received during the consultation period to date to widen the limited list in respect of medicines for the relief of constipation, especially among the elderly and young children; and what response he has made.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have received a number of comments about the laxatives that would remain available on NHS prescription under our limited list proposals, including some which cite the needs of the elderly and young children. We are carefully considering all these views.

West Midlands RHA (District Managers)

Mr. Golding asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when district managers in the West Midlands regional health authority will be appointed; and whether he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: District general manager appointments will be made in the west midlands when the health authorities concerned have completed the necessary preparatory work in line with the national arrangements.

NHS (Commercial Service Contracts)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the savings of £6 million attributed to 34 recently let commercial service contracts in the National Health Service takes into account additional costs attributable to redundancy payments and the compensation element of superannuation costs.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have advised health authorities to take into account the cost to them of redundancy and other severance payments in assessing the savings that can be made by using private contractors, and we would expect these payments to have been taken into account in the savings authorities have reported.

Benefits

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total amount of benefit claimed by, and in respect of, unemployed 16 and 17-year-olds; and how that amount is distributed between the various classes of claim.

Mr. Newton: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Stillbirths

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what specific investigations he intends to conduct into the cause of stillbirths in women from ethnic minority communities.

Mr. John Patten: We have identified as a priority the funding of research into the causes of perinatal deaths, including stillbirths. At local level we would expect Maternity Services Liaison Committees to see that clinical reviews are carried out on perinatal deaths, so that any special factors that appear to be associated with the stillbirth rate of particular groups of mothers, including those from ethnic minority communities, can be identified.

Vietnamese Refugees

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what initiatives have been taken by his Department during the last five years to make National Health Service facilities more easily accessible to Vietnamese refugees.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: In 1979-80 health authorities were provided with additional funds specifically to cover the extra direct costs incurred by community health services in those areas where special reception centres were set up. Also, our Department contributed material on the National Health Service to leaflets prepared for the refugees by the Home Office and voluntary organisations. Every effort has been made by the voluntary organisations working with the refugees to ensure that they are taken on the list of a general practitioner as soon as possible.

Hospitals (Repairs)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many hospitals have had to undertake repairs on leaking roofs during the last five years.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Adults (Survey)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidelines he intends to issue arising from the survey published by his Department on the heights and weights of adults in Great Britain.

Mr. John Patten: The findings of this survey to the effect that many people in Great Britain including young people are overweight, and that heart trouble occurs more frequently among overweight people, highlights the importance of the dietary recommendations made in the recent report on diet and cardiovascular disease by the Chief Medical Officer's committee on medical aspects of food policy (COMA). My right hon. Friend has asked the British Nutrition Foundation and the Health Education Council that their joint advisory committee on nutrition education turn the COMA advice into practical guidelines for the public as soon as possible.

Griffiths Report

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) when he intends to complete implementation of those parts of the Griffiths report which relate to the organisation of his Department; when he intends that the process of identification of general managers at unit level should be completed; and if he will make a statement;

(2) if he will now lay before Parliament the details of recent changes in the internal organisation of his Department, following the Government's response to recommendation No. 6 of the First Report of last Session from the Social Services Committee (HC 209).

Mr. Fowler: Details of initial changes made to the organisation of my Department in the light of the Griffiths report were given in my memorandum of written evidence to the Social Services Committee (published in HC 209). Now that the chairman of the NHS Management Board, Mr. Victor Paige, is in post, I shall be considering with him what further changes are needed. I will then be in a position to inform the House.

Health authorities have been asked to complete the establishment of the general management function at unit level by the end of 1985.

Antenatal Clinics

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how long were the average waiting times for appointments for mothers of ethnic minority groups in antenatal clinics (a) in the Greater London area and (b) in the west midlands region in comparison with those for mothers of the indigenous population.

Mr. John Patten: Information on this is not collected centrally but I can see no reason why there should be any differentiation between mothers from different ethnic groups when bookings are made for antenatal clinics.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what arrangements he intends to make for the provision of more evening antenatal clinic facilities to enable women and mothers with children to attend with their husbands after finishing work.

Mr. John Patten: The Maternity Services Advisory Committee in its first report recommended that health authorities should involve fathers in antenatal care wherever possible, and that an assessment should be made of the need for evening or weekend clinics in order to overcome any problems of access. We have commended the report to health authorities for them to consider what action can and should be taken locally.

St. Thomas' Hospital

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what plans he has for expanding the waiting area of the surgical outpatients department of St. Thomas' hospital in London.

Mr. John Patten: West Lambeth health authority is responsible for the management of St. Thomas' hospital. I suggest the hon. Member seek this information from the chairman of the authority.

Education Centres

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what guidelines he intends to issue to doctors and nurses sharing education centres in tightly planned hospitals about timetabling arrangements.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: A health building note is in course of preparation which will give guidance to health authorities on accommodation for education. We intend to include some guidance on timetabling to ensure that adequate but not extravagant resources are allocated to the education of Health Service staff. The draft document will, however, be the subject of consultation with NHS interests and with medical, nursing and other interested professional and staff bodies.

Doctors' Surgeries

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what resources he intends to make available for the purpose of improving security arrangements for general practitioners' surgeries.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Resources are already available under the improvement grant scheme to doctors wishing to improve the security arrangements at their practice premises. Under this scheme eligible doctors receive by way of grant one-third of the actual cost to them of approved work and related fees, and many doctors have taken advantage of this facility.

Bloomsbury District Health Authority

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what resources he intends to make available to Bloomsbury district health authority for the provision of funded sessions for perinatal pathology.

Mr. John Patten: The allocation of resources to Bloomsbury Health Authority is a matter for North-East Thames regional health authority. The uses to which those resources are put is a matter for those authorities.

Perinatal Pathology

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps he intends to take to attract more potential specialists to train in the field of perinatal pathology.

Mr. John Patten: Training for the highly specialised field of perinatal pathology within the discipline of histopathology is provided according to local needs and circumstances. There is no uniform training syllabus formulated by the Royal College of Pathologists, the appropriate independent professional body. The development of services is a matter for health authorities within available resources.

Hospitals (Rooms)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what proportion of hospitals within the National Health Service are equipped with two, four and six-bedded rooms.

Mr. John Patten: This information is not available centrally.

NHS Hospitals

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what action has been taken by his Department during the last five years in respect of National Health Service hospitals considered by the Public Accounts Committee as being constructionally suspect; and if he will specify the hospitals concerned.

Mr. John Patten: During the past five years the PAC has considered structural defects at the following hospitals:

The Hospital for Sick Children: Great Ormond Street
Guys
Monyhull
Goscote
Leighton
Basingstoke
Princess Margaret: Swindon
Southend

In all these cases the Department has approved proposals for remedial work by the regional or special health authorities concerned. It has also agreed their undertaking legal proceedings to recover the costs of this work in appropriate cases.

Hospital Construction Projects

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many hospital construction projects undertaken by private contractors have had to be temporarily halted due to strikes and pay claims or to be totally abandoned owing to bankruptcy or liquidation of firms in the past 10 years.

Mr. John Patten: No major hospital construction projects have been totally abandoned in the past ten years because of the bankruptcy or liquidation of private contractors. The number that has been temporarily halted due to strikes and pay claims is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Health Authorities (Managers)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many regional health authorities have appointed general managers; how many of the appointees are new to the National Health Service; and what salaries and conditions of service have been fixed for them;

(2) how many district health authorities have appointed general managers; what percentage of appointees are new to the National Health Service; what arrangements exist for determining the salaries and conditions of service of appointees; and if these arrangements will involve Whitley council machinery.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Following is the position in England at 4 January:

	Region	District
Number of authorities	14	192
Number of appointments authorised	13	68
Number of appointees new to the NHS	None	6

The interim arrangements for determining remuneration were set out in paragraph 12 of Annex C of our Department's circular HC(84)13, a copy of which was placed in the Library. We have not yet reached any conclusion on long-term arrangements for determining the pay of general managers.

Conditions of service are those determined for National Health Service staff in the discipline from which the general manager is recruited or, in the case of appointees new to the National Health Service, those applicable to administrative and clerical staff. In all cases protection of general manager remuneration in the event of non-renewal of the appointment at the end of the period of tenure is excluded.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether staff expected to undertake additional duties and responsibilities consequent upon the appointment of a general manager will be regraded.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether his Department is overseeing the changes to management structures consequent upon the appointment of general managers at district and regional level.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Yes.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps will be taken by the regions to discuss with staffs the effects of the appointment of general managers.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I would expect that all health authorities will wish to keep their staff fully informed on the effects of management changes but the method of communication chosen is a matter for each authority.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the appointment of general managers by health authorities entails the definition of job descriptions of chief officers.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Job descriptions are matters for local health authorities. The appointment of a general manager is bound to cause the existing job description of a chief officer to be amended in some respects.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether health authorities consult the relevant officers before appointing general managers.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Health Authorities (Private Patients)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services by what criteria he chose the 37 health authorities which were investigated by his Department's auditors regarding the collection of private patient fees.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The 10 principal auditors responsible for the audit of the accounts of Health Authorities in England were instructed to arrange for each of their three teams to visit at least one large hospital with potential private patient activity. The final choice was theirs, subject to the concurrence of the Director of Audit.

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will arrange for his Department's auditors to investigate the collection of private patient fees in districts where this is requested (a) by the health authority or (b) by any of its members.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The recent exercise conducted by the statutory auditors at the request of my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State revealed failure by some health authorities to comply with Departmental circulars and to maintain proper control. A list of the more important failures was appended to a letter I then sent to all health authority chairmen. In this letter all health authorities were required to review their arrangements and to take corrective action where necessary.

The statutory auditors examine, in the course of a prescribed cycle, the financial aspects of all the activities of health authorities and it would not be useful to interfere with this planned programme by placing the resources of the Audit Branch at the disposal of health authorities.

NHS Patients (Private Clinics)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether district health authorities are entitled to enter into contractual arrangements so that National Health Service patients are treated in private clinics by consultants who normally work in the district's own hospitals.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Yes.

NHS (District Management Teams)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services in what way the accountability of unit managers to the district general manager alters the responsibilities of members of district management teams in the National Health Service.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The accountability of management including members of district management teams and unit general managers to the general manager who is himself personally accountable to the district health authority is an important element in the new arrangements we are introducing.

Regions (Resource Allocations)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he takes the length of waiting lists into account when determining resource allocations to regions.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. The length of waiting lists is not in itself an accurate guide to the respective needs of regions.

Hospitals (Statistics)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for each year since 1970 the number of National Health Service hospitals in each region.

Mr. John Patten: I shall let the hon. Member have a reply as soon as possible.

Health Authorities (Statistics)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will give for each special health authority, district health authority, regional health authority and for England as a whole (a) the number of authorised pay beds at 31 December 1983, (b) the average daily number of beds occupied by private patients during 1983 and (c) the number of discharges and deaths of private patients during 1983.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The information requested is given in the tables.

Residential Institutions (Inmates)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information is available to him on the number of people who live, on a permanent basis, during the week in a hospital or other form of residential institution but who return to their family home at weekends.

Mr. John Patten: While we have some information on long-stay patients in hospitals and permanent residents in other statutory, voluntary or private residential institutions, we have no central information on how many return to family homes at weekends.

Medical Product (Safety)

Mr. Best asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will refer a product, the name of which has been supplied to him, to the Committee on Safety of Medicines.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Back Pain Association (Exhibition)

Mr. Jessel asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will arrange for an exhibition relating to the Back Pain Associaton to be displayed in the Upper Waiting Hall.

Mr. John Patten: I understand that arrangements have been made with the authorities of the House for the exhibition to the held in the Upper Waiting Hall on 14 January.

Prescription (Costs)

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the average cost per item dispensed to prescriptions made out by general practitioners under the National Health Service in each year since 1975 at constant prices and the average cost of each such prescription, also at constant prices.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The average net ingredient cost per prescription item dispensed by retail pharmacists and appliance contractors in England in each year since 1975, at constant (1975) prices was as follows:

Year	£
1975	0·94
1976	1·01
1977	1·09
1978	1·15
1979	1·17
1980	1·21
1981	1·27
1982	1·32
1983	1·39

Family Practitioner Committees

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services (1) how many family practioner committees in England have a comprehensive computerised age/sex register;

(2) how many family practitioner committees in England are expected to have a comprehensive computerised age/sex register by the end of 1985-86.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Fifteen family practioners committees now have operational computerised patient registers. By the end of 1985-86, on present plans, the total will be 31.

Cervical Cancer

Mr. Dobson asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether he is satisfied with the use family practitioner committees and district health authorities have made of cervical cancer recall records passed on to them when the Southport scheme ended.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The national recall system operated by the NHS central registry at Southport proved ineffective. After consultation with health authorities this scheme was phased out. The cytology forms which were held centrally by the Registry until 1981 were sent to health authorities to be used as the basis of their own local recall arrangements. We have recently reminded health authorities of their responsibilities for ensuring that symptomless women in the priority groups who have at any time presented for a smear test are recalled at five yearly intervals.

Doctors' Surgeries

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many cases of burglaries into general practitioners' surgeries have arisen during the past 12 months; and what quantities of drugs and prescription pads went missing as a result.

Mr. Mellor: I have been asked to reply.

The information requested is not available separately.

Whooping Cough Vaccine

Mr. Meacher asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many children have been damaged by whooping cough vaccine in each of the last 10 years.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 30 November 1984, c. 625]: It is not possible to say how many children have suffered such damage. Data on damage by whooping cough vaccine are analysed in the document, "Whooping Cough", published in 1981 by HMSO, which contains reports by the Committee on the Safety of Medicines and the Joint Committee on Vaccination and Immunisation. It includes the results of a special study which concluded that ". . . it seems likely that permanent damage as a result of pertussis immunisation is a very rare event and the attribution of a cause in individual cases is precarious".

We have no grounds for believing that there has been any change in this position.

ENT Consultants

Mr. Ashley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the waiting time for (a) outpatient appointments and (b) operations in the ear, nose and throat specialties in (i) the United Kingdom, (ii) England and (iii) each of the English health authorities.

Mr. John Patten [pursuant to his reply, 11 December 1984, c. 474]: Information on out-patient waiting times is not available centrally. The estimated median interval between the date a patient was put on the in-patient waiting list and the date of admission to a NHS hospital in each of the English regional health authorities and the four United Kingdom countries is given in the table. An aggregated figure covering the whole of the United Kingdom is not available.

Supplementary Benefit

Mr. Sayeed asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the number of pensioners with gross incomes (a) over £20,000, (b) between £10,000 and £20,000, (c) between £5,000 and £10,000 and (d) receiving supplementary benefit; and if he will break down each figure into the following categories (i) lone pensioners, (ii) married couples and (iii) any other types of family unit.

Mr. Whitney [pursuant to the reply, 17 December, c. 46-7]: Based on an analysis of the incomes of people over pensionable age recorded in the 1981 family expenditure survey and deflating the respective gross income levels to 1981 equivalent values, it is estimated that the distribution of the gross incomes of pensioner family units is as shown in the table.

Visually Handicapped People

Mr. Galley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he has any further plans to protect the visually handicapped when the provisions of the Health and Social Security Act 1984 are fully implemented.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke [pursuant to his reply, 21 December 1984, c. 420]: We will continue to give help towards the cost of spectacles supplied under the general opthalmic service (GOS) based upon financial need.

We propose to identify certain of the more powerful or complex lenses currently supplied under the GOS. All patients needing such lenses will be given the option of continuing to have them supplied by the GOS. The charge to the patient will reflect the cost of the lenses and their dispensing. As at present people on low income will get them free or have part of the charge remitted.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

AIDS (Research)

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list the research projects on acquired immune deficiency syndrome that the Government are supporting; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: The Medical Research Council, which receives its grant-in-aid through the Department, is at present supporting the following research programmes on AIDS through its project grants scheme:

(a) Professor M. W. Adler and Dr. R. S. Tedder (Middlesex hospital medical school, London): An investigation into the immunology and aetiology of AIDS;

(b) Dr. J. Craske (PHLS, Withington hospital, Manchester): An epidemiological study of the relationship of AIDS in patients with disorders of blood coagulation to its possible acquisition through treatment with blood products;

(c) Dr. D. J. Jeffries (St. Mary's hospital medical school, London) and Dr. D. Taylor Robinson, (clinical research centre, Harrow): Virological investigations of patients with AIDS;

(d) Dr. A. Pinching (St. Mary's hospital medical school, London): A study on the killing of intracellular pathogens by macrophages derived from homosexual males with AIDS and related disorders;

(e) Professor R. Weiss (Institute of cancer research, London): Retroviruses associated with AIDS.

I would also refer the hon. Member to my replies on this subject on 26 November 1984 at column 389, and on 11 December at columns 451-52.

Foetal Tissue

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will list all those research establishments in the United Kingdom which are supplied with foetal tissue from the foetal tissue bank at the Royal Marsden hospital; and what safeguards exist to ensure that such material does not go beyond the shores of the United Kingdom

Mr. Brooke: I understand from the Medical Research Council, which funds the foetal tissue bank at the Royal Marsden hospital, that in 1984 the following establishments received foetal material from the bank:

Brompton hospital, London
Central public health virus laboratory, Colindale
Central public health laboratory, Middlesex
Charing Cross hospital, London
Guy's hospital, London
Hammersmith hospital, London
Harefield hospital, Uxbridge
Imperial cancer research fund, London
King's college hospital, London
London school of hygiene and tropical medicine, London
Ludwig institute, Royal Marsden hospital, Sutton
MRC clinical research centre, London
MRC human biochemical genetics unit, London
National hospital, London
Royal Marsden hospital, London
Royal postgraduate medical school, London
St. Bartholomew's hospital, London
St. George's hospital, London
St. Mary's hospital, London
St. Thomas's hospital, London
University college hospital and medical school, London
Department of pathology, university of Cambridge
Westminster hospital medical school, London

All material from this foetal tissue bank is issued only to researchers in the United Kingdom, who have first obtained written clearance from their local ethical committee. I understand that the MRC regards this as sufficient safeguard against such material being exported.

Science Budget

Mr. Baldry asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science if he will make a statement about the distribution of the science budget for 1985-86.

Sir Keith Joseph: Having considered the recommendations of the Advisory Board for the Research Councils, I have decided that the science budget for 1985-86 should, subject to approval by Parliament of the Estimates in due course, be allocated as follows:

1985-86	£ million cash
Agricultural and Food Research Council	50·3
Medical Research Council	122·3
Natural Environment Research Council	67·3
Science and Engineering Research Council	298·0
Economic and Social Research Council	23·6
British Museum (Natural History)*	16·2
Royal Society	5·9
Fellowship of Engineering	0·25
	583·9

* Including expenditure of £4·8 million by PSA on behalf of the museum.

Capital Expenditure

Mr. Fallon asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science what are the implications for capital expenditure on schools and further education of the recent allocations to local education authorities for prescribed capital expenditure and for capital projects at voluntary aided and special agreement schools in 1985-86.

Sir Keith Joseph: The total available for 1985-86 in respect of county and voluntary schools and of local authority further and higher education is £355 million. This should permit continuing progress with the removal of surplus school places. Within further and higher education, it provides for a start to be made on all those new projects of which local authorities were provisionally informed last autumn, and for all bids made by authorities for expenditure on equipment related to teaching and research to be met in full.

I have retained a small reserve, largely against the possibility of any local education authority being able to demonstrate that the reduction of the prescribed proportion of capital receipts will make it impossible to fulfil contractual or statutory obligations. Authorities have been informed of their share of the total, and a list of the allocations has been placed in the Libraries of both Houses.

PRIME MINISTER

Hull

Q40. Mr. McNamara asked the Prime Minister when she next intends to pay an official visit to Hull.

The Prime Minister: I have at present no plans to do so.

North Sea Oil Revenue

Q66. Mr. Hunter asked the Prime Minister what will replace revenue currently derived from North sea oil production when the level of production has decreased significantly; and if she will make a statement.

The Prime Minister: The North sea tax revenues are being put to good use. Inflation has been reduced to the lowest level since the 1960s and the level of Government borrowing relative to GDP is one of the lowest anywhere in the world. A considerable part of the public sector's overseas debts have been repaid and overseas assets are being built up. Domestic fixed investment is expected to have reached record levels in 1984.

This will place the public sector finances and the economy itself in a good position to withstand falling oil revenues when oil production eventually begins to decline. The non-North sea economy and overseas earnings will tend to generate additional revenues as oil production declines. The Green Paper on "Public Expenditure and Taxation into the 1990s" (Cmnd. 9189) showed that, with restraint in public expenditure, falling debt interest costs should allow both non-North sea taxes and the level of borrowing (relative to GDP) to be reduced despite declining oil revenues.

Supplementary Benefit

Q69. Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Prime Minister how many people were in receipt of supplementary benefit on 1 January; and how many of those in receipt had children.

The Prime Minister: At December 1983, the latest date for which information is available, 4·3 million, of whom 965,000 had dependent children.

Sunday Trading

Q78. Dr. Marek asked the Prime Minister if she will issue guidance to local authorities concerning the prosecution of shops which contravene the law relating to Sunday opening.

The Prime Minister: No. The law is clear and local authorities do not require guidance.

Government Boarding Allowances

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister if she will estimate the saving which could be made if the rules of parental contribution applicable to university students were applied to parents given a Government boarding allowance.

The Prime Minister: The necessary information on parental income is not available since, as I explained to the hon. Member on 14 December, at column 606, this is not a factor in determining boarding allowances for the children of public servants.

Mr. Austin Mitchell asked the Prime Minister if she will publish figures broken down by Department for the cost of Government boarding allowance schemes for public servants in 1983-84; and if she will set out the circumstances for each scheme in which allowances are paid.

The Prime Minister: The figures requested for 1983-84 are as follows:

	£ million
Armed Forces	76·5
Diplomatic Service	5·9
British Council	1·2
Overseas Development Administration	0·7
Ministry of Defence (Civilians)	0·5
Other Departments	0·2
Total	85·0

The total differs slightly from that given in my reply to the hon. Member on 14 December at column 606, because that reply covered only the Ministry of Defence and the Diplomatic Service.

Engagements

Mr. Greenway asked the Prime Minister if she will list her official engagements for 10 January.

The Prime Minister: This morning I presided at a meeting of the Cabinet and had meetings with ministerial colleagues and others. In addition to my duties in the House, I will be having further meetings later today.

Peking

Mr. Adley asked the Prime Minister if she will make a statement on her recent visit to Peking.

The Prime Minister: I refer my hon. Friend to the reply that I gave to the hon. Member for Liverpool, Riverside (Mr. Parry) on 9 January, at column 441.

TRANSPORT

Pelican Crossings

Mr. David Atkinson asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will make a statement on the time allowed for pedestrians to cross at pelican crossings.

Mrs. Chalker: Currently recommended times are set down in departmental standard TD/4/79. A copy is in the Library.

Two changes to the recommended timings for use in certain circumstances are under consideration which will benefit pedestrians. One is to keep the red signal showing to traffic for two seconds after the green walking man has started to flash, rather than as at present when the flashing amber signal showing to traffic starts immediately the green walking man starts to flash. The other is to increase by two seconds the duration of the period when the green walking man is shown steadily illuminated.

Roads

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Transport whether it is his Department's policy to ensure that when improvements to trunk roads or the building of bypasses on trunk roads severs main routes between villages that these routes should have bridges or underpasses built to maintain the link.

Mr. Ridley: Bridges or underpasses are provided where necessary. If the hon. Member has a particular case in mind, perhaps she would write to me.

Bypasses

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Transport what factors, apart from cost, are taken into account when assessing different schemes for building bypasses on trunk roads; and how these different factors are weighted.

Mr. Ridley: The variety of non-financial factors included in the assessment of trunk road schemes are set out in the Department of Transport's "Manual of Environmental Appraisal", published in September 1983, copies of which are in the Library of the House. No attempt is made to attribute particular weights to these factors as the circumstances of each case vary considerably and non-financial factors are not in general capable of being assessed under a common weighting system.

A420 (Kingston Bagpuize)

Mrs. Dunwoody asked the Secretary of State for Transport what were his reasons for implementing a trunking order on the A420 around Kingston Bagpuize.

Mr. Ridley: As I explained in reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Wantage (Mr. Jackson), on 17 December at column 69, we propose that the A420 between Swindon and Oxford should become a trunk road because it is part of an important route between Swindon and the midlands.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Trade Barriers

23. Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if legal barriers to trade exist between Northern Ireland and the Republic of Ireland which do not apply to trade between the rest of the United Kingdom and the Republic of Ireland; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: No.

Foetal Material

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will introduce a specific customs classification for dead human foetal material; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Fletcher: I can see no reason for doing so.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Police Interviews (Tape Recording)

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department if he will make a statement as to the recent tape recording trials of police interviews in Leicester.

Mr. Giles Shaw: The tape recording of police interviews has been in operation at Leicester central police station since 2 April 1984. Five interview rooms are equipped for tape recording: three of them in the main cell block; one in the CID suite; and one in the regional crime squad suite. Up to 31 December 1984, 3,378 persons had been interviewed on tape. The chief constable tells me that the officers who have participated in the trial have adapted well to the new procedures. Although it is too early to point with certainly to changes which have been brought about by tape recording, there is some evidence of an increase in the number of pleas of guilty and of less frequent challenge to police officers' evidence of interviews. Detailed monitoring of the trial in Leicester and in the five other tape recording trial areas is being undertaken by the Home Office research and planning unit in order to establish the full effects which tape recording gives rise to in the criminal justice system, and to inform the planning for the implementation of a national scheme. Home Office "Research Study No. 82", which reported the full background to the trials and some preliminary results, was published last month.

Sunday Trading

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many representations he has received since the publication of the Auld report; of these how many were in favour of revised shopping hours and how many against; and if he will list those from business and trade organisations.

Mr. Mellor: Following publication of the report of the Auld committee we have received 172 letters commenting on the recommendations. Of these 33 have been in favour of revised shopping hours and 139 against. The following business and trade organisations have written:

British Hardware Federation
Horticultural Trades Association
National Chamber of Trade
Pharamaceutical Society of Great Britain
Voluntary Group Association

Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984

Mr. Hayward asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what steps he proposes to take to issue codes of practice under the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984.

Mr. Brittan: Section 66 of the Police and Criminal Evidence Act 1984 requires the Home Secretary to issue codes of practice in connection with the exercise of statutory powers of stop and search; the detention, treatment, questioning and identification of persons by police officers; searches of premises by police officers; and the seizure of property found by police officers on persons or premises. Drafts of all these codes have already been published for public comment.

I have today published revised versions of these codes. Comments will, as before, be welcome, and should be sent to Room 530, Home Office by 8 February. In accordance with section 67 of the Act I shall consider carefully all representations made about the drafts; and after deciding what modifications are appropriate I shall seek Parliament's approval for their issue, to come into force on 1 January 1986.

Copies of the drafts have been placed in the Library of each House and sent to the wide range of interested bodies and individuals who have received earlier drafts. Additional copies are available on request, free of charge, from Room 531, Home Office.

ENERGY

China (Ministerial Visit)

Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for Energy what exhibitions in which British companies participating in China were visited by the Minister of State, Department of Energy in his recent visit at the end of November.

Mr. Buchanan-Smith: During my visit to China, from 1 to 7 December 1984, I opened the United Kingdom offshore oil and gas seminar in Beijing (Peking) and also participated in the seminar in Guangzhou (Canton).

The seminar, held in three centres (Beijing, Guangzhou and Shanghai), was organised jointly by the Offshore Supplies Office of the Department of Energy and the Sino-British Trade Council, and has been judged a highly successful event. It was technical in character and involved the following companies:

Atlantic Drilling Company Ltd. (exploration drilling)
BP Exploration Ltd.
Matthew Hall plc (project management)
Humphreys and Glasgow Ltd. (engineering design)
John Brown Engineers and Constructors Ltd. (engineering design)
Rolls Royce Ltd. (power generation)
Cleveland Redpath Offshore Ltd. (fabrication)
Balfour Kilpatrick Ltd. (hook-up and commissioning)

Mr. William Ross asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will publish a table in the Official Report to show (a) the most optimistic, (b) the most pessimistic and (c) the mean projected costs of electricity generation available to him for each design structure or device for obtaining energy from waves.

Mr. David Hunt: The Department's energy technology support unit is preparing a comprehensive report on wave energy which will include this information. On publication a copy will be placed in the Library of the House.

Nuclear Installations Inspectorate Report (Heysham)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Energy what action he is taking as a result of the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate report, requested by the Sizewell B public inquiry, revealing weaknesses in procedure, ergonomics and human performance, following the incident at Heysham in June 1984; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Goodlad: Both the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate and the Central Electricity Generating Board have given evidence on this incident at the Sizewell public inquiry. The CEGB has accepted fully the recommendations for improved practices in appropriate areas as outlined in a special internal inquiry. The incident was also investigated by the Nuclear Installations Inspectorate and it has concluded that the measures being taken by the CEGB are satisfactory. It will continue to monitor the implementation and effectiveness of these measures.

Coal Industry Dispute

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Energy how much coal has been produced since 1 December; what is the cumulative figure since the coal mining dispute began; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. David Hunt: The latest published figures show that 44·8 million tonnes of deep-mined coal were produced between the start of the NUM overtime ban in November 1983 and the end of October 1984.

Fusion Programme

Mr. Eggar asked the Secretary of State for Energy if he will make a statement about the United Kingdom's fusion programme.

Mr. Goodlad: My Department has recently completed a review of the United Kingdom's fusion programme. This research forms an integral part of the Euratom fusion programme, a successful example of European co-operation in the high technology sector, to which the United Kingdom makes a major financial and scientific contribution.

My right hon. Friend has decided that the Government's direct contribution to the UKAEA's fusion work, which is carried out under a contract of association with Euratom, should be £15·9 million in 1985-86, £13·7 million in 1986-87 and £13·3 million in 1987-88.

This funding, along with our commitments to the Joint European Torus project under the joint understanding and the host agreement, will ensure that the United Kingdom maintains a substantial fusion programme.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Argentina

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs whether the Swiss Government have expressed any concern to Her Majesty's Government about continuing to act as a guardian of British interests in Argentina; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: No.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Pesticides

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will list the purposes for which DDT was approved for use by farmers in (a) 1970, (b) 1975 and (c) 1980; and what was the known use by weight and area of DDT-based products in each of these years.

Mrs. Fenner: DDT was cleared under the pesticides safety precautions scheme for the following uses in 1970, 1975 and 1980:

1970

1. Home garden (Use withdrawn 1971).
2. Home kitchen and larder (Use withdrawn 1971).
3. Rodenticide.
4. Agriculture and horticulture: On any non-edible crop. On any growing edible crop subject to specified harvest intervals.
5. Food storage.
6. Animal husbandry (use withdrawn 1972).

1975

1. Rodenticide (use withdrawn 1980).

2. Agriculture and horticulture: On any non-edible crop. On any growing edible crop subject to specified harvest intervals, with the exception of:

(a) permanent and temporary grass for grazing, silage or hay (use on new leys was acceptable where necessary);
(b) brassica seed crops, peas and beans (but allowable for weevil control of seedling crops);
(c) top fruit, raspberries, gooseberries, loganberries, blackberries and redcurrants;
(d) the control of aphids on any crop.

1980

Agriculture and horticulture (as above).

These uses were withdrawn as alternative pesticides became available. The last cleared use, that is to control eelworms in ornamentals, sugar beet, potatoes, strawberries and carrots, was withdrawn from 1 October 1984.

The approximate weights of DDT used were as follows:

1970—210 tonnes
1975—90 tonnes
1980—100 tonnes

I regret that information on areas treated is not available at reasonable cost.

Conservation

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if, in pursuance of his responsibilities under section 11 of the Countryside Act 1968, he is prepared to reject a claim for grant-aid under the agriculture and horticultural grant schemes relating to an investment which has seriously damaged the countryside or its flora and fauna (a) within a site of special scientific interest, national park or area of outstanding natural beauty and (b) in the wider countryside; and what specific advice his officials offer farmers and landowners so as to avoid any damaging works in the countryside.

Mrs. Fenner: Our policy is to avoid or minimise damage to the countryside, and especially to sites of special scientific interest and national parks. To this end we introduced in 1980 a requirement that applicants under the capital grant schemes must notify the Nature Conservancy Council or a national park authority of any proposals they wish to carry out on a site of special scientific interest or in a national park. In the majority of instances proposals do not raise problems or, in discussion with the Ministry's Agricultural Development and Advisory Service, ways are found of overcoming them. In the very few cases where this is not possible we consider, in consultation with my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment whether or not to withhold grant.

In the wider countryside, we require farmers under the capital grant schemes to have regard to conservation in undertaking investments and ADAS is available to give advice on how best to meet this requirement and on conservation generally. This may involve consultation with statutory conservation bodies and the farming and wildlife advisory groups.

Of the cases which have been referred to us for decision we have found it necessary to withhold grant in relatively few and my right hon. Friend has concurred with our decision to pay grant in the rest.

North Duffield Carrs

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if he will quantify the substantial agricultural benefits referred to by the Minister of State the noble Lord, Lord Belstead, at a luncheon given by the Association of Drainage Authorities on 20 November that would have accrued if the pump drainage of North Duffield Carrs had been approved.

Mrs. Fenner: The agricultural benefits that would have accrued if the Ouse and Derwent Internal Drainage Board's scheme for pumped drainage of North Duffield Carrs had been approved for grant have been evaluated at around £125 per hectare. They would have arisen from the more efficient use of the land for livestock.

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what response he has made to the critique made by conservation bodies of the economic justification made by the Ouse and Derwent Internal Drainage Board for the pump drainage of North Duffield Carrs, in particular the charge that the cost benefit methodology employed by the Internal Drainage Board was at variance with Government approved guidelines.

Mrs. Fenner: The critique undertaken by conservation bodies of the economic justification made by the Ouse and Derwent Internal Drainage Board for pump drainage of North Duffield Carrs was taken fully into account in the consideration of the board's application for grant-aid.

Dr. David Clark asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food if the programme of testing wildlife, particularly birds of prey, for residues of DDT, Dieldrin, Aldrin and Endrin will continue; and whether there has been an overall increase or decline in the residues of these products in the tissues and eggs of wildlife populations sampled in the periods (a) 1970 to 1974, (b) 1975 to 1979 and (c) 1980 to the present.

Mrs. Fenner: Current studies on residue monitoring in birds of prey undertaken by the Institute of Terrestrial Ecology on behalf of the Nature Conservancy Council will continue until 1986. A decision on whether or not to continue the monitoring after 1986 will be taken early in that year.

The most-sampled and best studied species are the sparrowhawk, kestrel and heron. Liver residues of DDE (the main fat-soluble metabolite of DDT) in kestrels have decreased throughout the periods listed; in herons it decreased during the early 1970s and early 1980s but changed little in the late 1970s; in sparrowhawks there has been little change. HEOD (an active ingredient of both dieldrin and aldrin) residues in all three species showed no significant change in the early 1970s and decreased in the late 1970s. The decrease continued into the 1980s in the heron. Endrin is not included in the monitoring scheme.

Only aldrin is still used in agriculture and horticulture, the use of the other substances having been phased out since the 1960s.

EMPLOYMENT

Youth Training Scheme

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment what additional expenditure on the youth training scheme would be necessary in 1984-85 if the scheme were to accommodate all the 16 and 17-year-olds now unemployed in Great Britain; how many additional places would be needed; and if he has any plans to expand the scheme in 1985-86 to accommodate all the 16 and 17-year-olds who would otherwise be unemployed.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Estimates of the additional expenditure needed to extend the youth training scheme in this way depend on the flow of unemployed young people during the relevant period, rather than on a single "snapshot" at a point in time, and on assumptions about their length of stay on the scheme, about the additional off-the-job training which might be provided and about the contribution which longer-duration trainees might make to output. No estimates are available for 1984-85 which take account of these factors, and which provide for all unemployed young people under 18 to be on the scheme.

On plans for the youth training scheme in 1985-86, I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 9 January, at column 464. Eligibility rules for the scheme next year were announced on 12 November. Unemployed 16 and 17-year-old school and college leavers, together with employed 16-year-old leavers, and some other older groups of disabled young people, will continue to be eligible. Some special groups of 18-year-olds will also be able to take part in the scheme next year.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people in training on the youth training scheme are estimated to be employees (a) on current year schemes and (b) on previous year schemes; how these figures compare with the previous year; what growth in the number of employees was expected when planning 1984-85 scheme places; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: I shall reply to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment how many young people are currently in training on the youth training scheme (a) on current year schemes and (b) on previous year schemes; how these figures compare with the previous year; whether they represent an increase in the take-up rate of scheme places; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: There were 264,972 young people in training on current year schemes, and 40,403 young people in training on previous year schemes on the youth training scheme on 28 December 1984, compared to 256,533 young people in training at the end of December 1983 all of whom were on current-year schemes. This increase in the take-up of scheme places shows that young people clearly recognise the advantages of participating in a high quality training programme.

Careers Service (Statistics)

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment what representations he has received from careers officers on the accuracy of the information collected from the careers service by the Manpower Services Commission for youth training scheme purposes; whether he is satisfied with the accuracy of the information provided by the careers service on the number of young people leaving school and the number likely to find work by 31 December 1985; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Peter Morrison: A number of representations have been received from the careers service on this issue. The main point raised was that the deadline date of 16 October 1984 by which the information was to be returned to this Department was too early to allow accurate figures to be produced.

The Manpower Services Commission recognises the limitations on the quality of the data which the careers service provided by the given date. Nevertheless, it is felt that the information provided an early indication of likely developments which, combined with information from other sources, made a valuable input to the planning of the youth training scheme for the year ahead.

Principal careers officers are being asked to supply revised estimates later this month in the light of the better information which will then be available to them.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will publish details of the exercise by which the careers service gave the Manpower Services Commission information on the labour market prospects of 1984-85 school leavers, showing for (a) 16-year-olds, (b) 17-year-olds, and (c) 18-year-olds the number and proportion expected to leave school, and the number and proportion expected to find work outside the youth training scheme by 31 December 1985 for each Manpower Services Commission region.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The information requested is as follows. It is derived from provisional forecasts of the position in December 1985 made by principal careers officers in the autumn of 1984 and must therefore be regarded as tentative. Principal careers officers will be asked to provide revised forecasts later this month in the light of the better information which will then be available to them.

Community Programme

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment if he will make available, with reference to the survey of community programme participants that was carried out between mid-November and mid-December 1983 by the Social and Community Planning Research Centre for the Manpower Services Commission, for each of the two standard age and duration eligibility conditions, the percentage of the then participants who were (I) married (a) female (i) supervisory/manager or (ii) non supervisory/manager and (b) male (i) supervisory/manager or (ii) non supervisory/manager and (II) single (a) female (i) supervisory/manager or (ii) non supervisory/manager and (b) male (i) supervisory/manager or (ii) non supervisory/manager; what percentage of each married subgrouping had an employed spouse; what percentage of each of all subgroupings had dependent resident children of 0 to 15 years age range; and what percentage of each subgroup was in receipt of any major benefit while on the community programme.

Mr. Peter Morrison: Available information about this survey is set out in the Social and Community Planning Research Centre report, a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Other information could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Employment if, pursuant to his reply, Official Report, 13 December, columns 559-60, he will give the inclusive dates for the survey from which information was derived, and give the proportion of those aged 18 to 24 years to those aged 25 years and over.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The survey to which I referred in my previous reply was conducted between June and August 1984. Of the 878 former participants surveyed, 52 per cent. were aged 18 to 24 and 48 per cent. were aged 25 and over.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Elections (Northern Ireland) Bill

15. Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he plans to propose an amendment to the Elections (Northern Ireland) Bill during its passage through another place to require the production of a current valid identity card as a precondition for the issuing of a ballot paper.

Mr. Scott: No. The Elections (Northern Ireland) Bill provides that a voter will be issued with a ballot paper on the production of one of the personal documents specified in the Bill.

Security

20. Rev. William McCrea asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the level of success of the security forces in eliminating terrorism in Northern Ireland during the past month.

Mr. Hurd: The security forces, with the full support of the Government, combat terrorism by all possible means within the law. To this end, 16 persons were charged with terrorist-type offences in December; and seven weapons, 636 rounds of ammunition and 1,014 lb of explosives were recovered.

21. Rev. Ian Paisley asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement on the security situation in Northern Ireland.

22. Sir John Biggs-Davison asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he will make a statement about the security of the Province.

Mr. Hurd: I refer the hon. Gentleman and my hon. Friend to the answer I gave the right hon. Member for Lagan Valley (Mr. Molyneaux) earlier today.

Mr. Peter Robinson asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland what was the cost of security in Northern Ireland per head of the population in each of the last five years.

Mr. Scott: Figures are not available detailing the extra cost involved in maintaining law and order in Northern Ireland as a result of the security situation.

Harland and Wolff

Mr. Arnold asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether any Government subsidy is paid in respect of engines produced by Harland and Wolff.

Dr. Boyson: No.

Orlit Dwellings (Comber and Donaghadee)

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland if he is yet in a position to announce the future of the Orlit dwellings in Comber and Donaghadee; and if he will make a statement.

Dr. Boyson: I am advised by the chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive that the Orlit dwellings at Comber have an estimated servicable life of 10 to 15 years and those at Donaghadee 5 to 10 years. The Housing Executive is currently examining options for dealing with its stock of Orlit dwellings at both Comber and Donaghadee and will be consulting residents and public representatives as soon as possible.

Baton Rounds

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland how many people have been killed or injured to date in Northern Ireland as the result of the firing of rubber or plastic bullets.

Mr. Hurd: Fourteen people have been killed by baton rounds since they were first introduced in 1970. Since 17 March 1981, 249 people are recorded as having been injured by them.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Nurses (Pay)

Mr. Willie W. Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the basic salary of a newly qualified staff nurse today; what was it in December 1974 expressed in 1984 prices; and what percentage increase would be needed to give the 1984 salary a purchasing value equal to that of 1974.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The information requested is set out in the table. The table shows that the purchasing power of a newly qualified staff nurse increased by 4 per cent. over the period when measured against changes in the Retail Price Index and by 6 per cent. when measured against changes in the Tax and Prices Index. Comparable information on earnings over this period is not available. In addition to pay increases, nurses' hours were reduced from 40 to 37½ per week in 1980-81.

Limited List Prescribing

Mr. Michael Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what calculation has been made of the stock losses associated with the introduction of a limited list; and what provision has been made for compensation.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to my hon. Friend the Member for Surrey, North-West (Mr. Grylls) on 17 December at columns 45-46. I have no information to demonstrate that stock losses to companies or pharmacies when the limited list is introduced on 1 April will be significant.

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many letters he has received arising from his decision to reduce the drugs available for prescription on the National Health Service; and, of these, how many were in favour of the proposal and how many against.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: So far we have received over 1,600 letters commenting on our proposals to limit the range of drugs available in certain therapeutic categories. Of these, about 100 have unequivocally supported the proposals. The remainder have expressed doubts or declared opposition but many of these letters, including about 250 circular letters supplied to doctors by the drug industry, have shown an imperfect understanding of our proposals. In addition, some 650 replies have been received from doctors to the Chief Medical Officer's letter of 14 December. These have contained constructive suggestions about the medicines that should remain available to meet clinical needs.

Health Authorities (Appointments)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he is satisfied that the appointments of the chairmen and members to district and regional health authorities made during the last five years fall within the guidelines issued in the National Health Services Act 1977.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We are not aware of any contravention of the National Health Service Act 1977 in appointments that have been made by Secretaries of State over the past five years. My right hon. Friend does not appoint members of district health authorities. He does appoint the chairmen and members of regional health authorities and the chairmen of district health authorities.

Hospitals (Communications and Transport)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what action he intends to take to ensure that National Health Service hospitals are equipped with modes of communication other than telephones and with methods of transport other than lifts.

Mr. John Patten: The Department provides guidance to health authorities on effective on-site and wide-area radio paging systems for staff location, hand portable and vehicle mounted mobile radio systems, nurse-call systems and direct speech communication systems other than telephones. The Department's nucleus hospital building programme is based on a policy for material handling using tugs and trolley trains, with ramps between floors where this is cost-effective. Existing hospitals will continue to take their own decisions on cost-effective transportation systems.

Supplementary Benefit

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the number of citizens registered as supplementary benefit claimants in the constituencies of Blaby, Bridgwater and Finchley.

Mr. Whitney: Blaby is served for supplementary benefit purposes by one DHSS office. The total number of supplementary benefit cases handled by this office at 12 December 1984 was 8,100.

Bridgwater and Finchley are each served for supplementary benefit purposes by more than one DHSS office and the boundaries are not conterminous with the constituency boundaries. The total numbers of supplementary benefit cases handled by the respective offices at 12 December 1984 were as follows:

	Number
Bridgwater
Bridgwater	7,400
Taunton	10,400
Finchley
Barnet	7,000
Hendon	10,100
Highgate	16,600
Wood Green	8,300

Hospitals

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many new hospitals have become operational since May 1979; and how many beds these will provide.

Mr. John Patten: A total of 38 major hospital schemes providing 12,035 beds have been completed between 1 May 1979 and 31 December 1984.

Contraception (Under-age Girls)

Mr. Greenway asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, in the light of the Court of Appeal's decision of 20 December in the Gillick case, he has any plans to introduce legislation requiring general practitioners to inform parents before they prescribe contraceptives for girls under the age of consent; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Following the judgment by the Court of Appeal, the position in law is that, except in an emergency or with the leave of a court, a doctor or other health professional must obtain parental consent before prescribing contraceptives to a girl under 16. We have announced our intention to appeal against the judgment, and it would be premature to consider legislation before the House of Lords has given its decision on the appeal.

Foetal Material

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the quantity of foetal material by weight, excluding placenta, and by numbers of individual foetuses, supplied by hospitals in each of the last three years for which figures are available, and the weights and numbers supplied by each private nursing home licensed by his Department to National Health Service hospitals or research establishments; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We do not collect this information centrally.

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will seek to introduce, in consultation with other member states of the European Economic Community, measures to outlaw international trade in dead foetal material.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have no evidence that any such international trade takes place to or from this country and therefore no reason to take action to regulate it.

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will detail the arrangements covering transportation, storage costs and possible loss or theft of foetal material between private nursing homes approved by his Department to supply National Health Service establishments.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: These arrangements are for the nursing homes and research establishments concerned, and we do not collect this information.

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services by what means dead foetal material from private nursing homes is transported to the foetal tissue bank at the Royal Marsden hospital; and what arrangements exist to pay for the costs of such transportation between these private nursing homes and the Royal Marsden hospital or its tissue bank.

Mr. Kennth Clarke: I understand that the material is collected from the nursing homes by nominated employees of the Medical Research Council and any costs associated with such transportation are met from the council's grant to the foetal tissue bank.

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what specific information prompted officials of his Department to carry out an investigation into allegations of a trade in foetal material between the United Kingdom and France; and on what basis his Department was able to decide that allegations of a trade were unfounded.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: The allegations referred to were no more specific than that foetal material was being exported from the United Kingdom to French laboratories for the manufacture of cosmetics. Our Department's detailed inquiries in both France and the United Kingdom produced no evidence of any kind to substantiate the allegations.

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what responsibility is placed upon officials of his Department to oversee the storage, transportation and disposal of dead foetal material from abortions in private nursing homes, National Health Service hospitals and research centres and establishments under the control of the Medical Research Council; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: Our Department approves the arrangements for the supply of foetal material by nursing homes approved under the Abortion Act. Arrangements for the supply of material by NHS hospitals and the Medical Research Council are the responsibility of their individual establishments. The use and disposal of foetal material is controlled very closely, in accordance with the code of practice recommended in the report of the advisory group on the use of foetuses and foetal material for research (the Peel report 1972).

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if his Department has received any information regarding a trade in human pituitary glands or dead foetuses as a result of the trial and conviction of Dr. Mark Patterson at the Old Bailey in July 1984 for conspiracy to sell blood; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: We have received no information about any trade of this kind in connection with the trial and conviction of Dr. Mark Patterson.

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the Robert nursing home is approved to supply foetal material from abortions to any institution other than the Birmingham university medical school; and for what purpose this material is required by this hospital.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. The supply of material is approved to the Birmingham university medical school for the study of genetics, umbilical vessels, comparative histology, cancer and foetal development.

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the Wistans nursing home is approved to supply foetal material to any institution other than St. Bartholomew's hospital and the East Birmingham hospital; and for what purpose this material is required at these two hospitals.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. The supply of material is approved for the production of purified alphafetoprotein for screening neural tube defects and for research on chorionic villus sampling.

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if the London Private hospital, the Park View clinic or the Raleigh nursing home are approved to supply foetal material from abortions to any institution other than the foetal tissue bank, Royal Marsden hospital; and for what purpose this material is required by the Royal Marsden hospital.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. The material is required for a variety of approved research projects on virology, immunology, oncology, biochemistry and molecular biology.

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the Calthorpe nursing home is approved to supply foetal material from abortions to any institution other than the Birmingham children's hospital, East Birmingham hospital and the Birmingham hospital; and for what purpose this material is required by these hospitals.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. The supply of material is approved to the Birmingham children's hospital for routine diagnostic work, and to the East Birmingham hospital and the Birmingham maternity hospital for research on chorionic villus sampling.

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Social Services whether the Blackdown nursing home is approved to supply foetal material from abortions to any institution other than the Birmingham maternity hospital and the East Birmingham hospital; and for what purpose this material is required by these hospitals.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: No. The supply of material is approved for research on chorionic villus sampling.

AIDS (Blood Donors)

Mr. Meadowcroft asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will make funds available to health authorities to compensate them for expenses incurred in screening blood donors for acquired immune deficiency syndrome.

Mr. Kenneth Clarke: I refer the hon. Member to my reply of 22 November 1984 to the hon. Member for Ross, Cromarty and Skye (Mr. Kennedy) at column 326.

Social Security Conventions

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if he will list the bodies within the United Kingdom that he is consulting on the extension of social security conventions with various European countries; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Whitney: The existing bilateral social security conventions with other European Community member states, which are out of date and cover only persons and matters not covered by the European Community social security regulations, will, subject to the views of the member States concerned, be revised and updated to take account of current legislation. The Foreign and Commonwealth Office, the Home Office, and the relevant authorities in Northern Ireland, the Isle of Man, Jersey and Guernsey are being consulted.

Family Income Supplement

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many families in the London borough of Waltham Forest are receiving family income supplement; and what was the comparable figure in May 1979.

Mr. Whitney: I regret that this information is not available. Family income supplement claims are dealt with by one centre at Blackpool and no information is maintained about claims from particular local areas.

SCOTLAND

James Miller and Partners Ltd. (Planning Inquiry)

Lord James Douglas-Hamilton asked the Secretary of State for Scotland when he expects to be in a position to announce his decision on the planning inquiry in relation to the land owned by James Miller and Partners Ltd. at Cultins road, Edinburgh.

Mr. Ancram: It has proved necessary to communicate with the parties about certain new evidence which has been sent to my right hon. Friend. A decision will be reached as soon as possible.

Housing Expenditure

Mr. McTaggart asked the Secretary of State for Scotland what was the total of public expenditure on housing in Scotland in (a) 1979-80 and (b) the latest year for which figures are available; and what percentage of total public expenditure in Scotland each figure represented in each respective year.

Mr. Ancram: Total public expenditure on housing in Scotland in 1979-80 was £734 million which amounted to 16·1 per cent. of the total public expenditure within the Secretary of State's responsibility. In 1983-84 (the latest year for which final figures are available) housing expenditure totalled £712 million, the equivalent percentage being 10·6 per cent.

The above figures are, as is usual with public expenditure, in net terms. As a measure of the resources available for spending, gross figures are more relevant. These show that capital expenditure on housing rose from £421 million in 1979-80 to £703 million in 1983-84 (a rise from 9·2 per cent. to 10·5 per cent. in the proportion of total public expenditure within the Secretary of State's responsibility).

Protection Orders

Mr. Canavan asked the Secretary of State for Scotland whether he will list the areas covered by protection orders which have been granted and protection orders which have been applied for under the Freshwater and Salmon Fisheries (Scotland) Act 1976 and the conditions under which protection has been granted or requested.

Mr. John MacKay: Formal proposals for protection orders in terms of the 1976 Act have been published in respect of four areas. Following compliance with the statutory procedures the Secretary of State was satisfied that the conditions on access and so on laid down in the Act had been met and protection orders for initial periods of three years were made. These are listed below:

The Rivers Tweed and Eye Protection Order 1980 (renewed by the Rivers Tweed and Eye Protection (Renewal) Order 1983) (S.I. 1980 No. 400 (s. 40) and S.I. 1983 No. 389 (s. 37)).

The Upper Spey and Associated Waters Protection Order 1982 (S.I. 1982 No. 377 (s. 48)).

The River Tummel Catchment Area Protection Order 1983 (S.I. 1983 No. 390 (s. 38)).

The River Lunan Catchment Area Protection Order 1983 (S.I. 1983 No. 391 (s. 39)).

Details of the areas covered by those protection orders are contained in the relevant statutory instruments, copies of which are available in the Library.

Inquiries have been received about the obtaining of protection orders for catchment areas of the river Don, river Tay, river Garnock and the rivers Annick and Irvine. None of these has yet gone beyond the preliminary stages.

Barnacle Geese

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Scotland how many licences he has so far granted to allow the killing of barnacle geese in the winter of 1984-85 upon Islay, Strathclyde; and what conditions have been attached to licences so issued.

Mr. John MacKay: Up to 4 January 1985 26 licences have been issued in the 1984-85 season to shoot barnacle geese on Islay. The conditions of a licence are as follows:

1. the area(s) within which such killing or taking is authorised shall be be the farm(s) . . . on the island of Islay but shall exclude any areas of foreshore, permanent grass outrun(s) not part of the normal utilisable area(s) of the farm(s) and all rough grazings including bogland;
2. flight shooting at the sea wall is also excluded;
3. the granting of this licence does not authorise the killing or taking of wild barnacle geese unless:
   (a) such killing or taking is carried out for the purpose of preventing serious damage;
   (b) there is no other satisfactory course of action for preventing such serious damage;
4. the methods by which the wild geese may be killed or taken shall be any which is not made unlawful by section 5 of the Act except that no decoy of any kind, including calls or lures whether natural or artificial, shall be used for the purpose of killing or taking;
5. if so required by a police constable and within such reasonable time as may be specified, this licence shall be produced by the licensee;
6. no later than one month after the date on which this licence expires or otherwise comes to an end, the licensee shall provide the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland with a report on the form provided of the occasions on which the wild geese were killed or taken, and the numbers of geese killed or taken: at the same time the licensee shall return to the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland the corresponding licence;
7. particulars of this licence and of the report which the licensee is required to provide may be made available by the Department of Agriculture and Fisheries for Scotland to any person or organisation who is considered by the Department to have reasonable grounds for having such information; and
8. this licence may be modified or revoked by the Secretary of State for Scotland at any time without prior notice and, if not so revoked, shall expire at midnight on the thirtieth day of April, nineteen hundred and eighty-five.

In addition, a licence issued to a landlord contains the following further condition:

at any time the numbers of persons who may be authorised by subsidiary licences by the licensee shall not exceed 4 in respect of the area named above except where the licensee participates in the killing or taking when the number shall not exceed 3.

Each licence issued is accompanied by notes and also by notes for guidance.

Forestry Commission

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if the Forestry Commission will make it its practice, in pursuance of its responsibilities under section 11 of the Countryside Act 1968, to reject claims for grant under the dedication schemes or forestry grant scheme in cases where the Government's statutory advisors on nature conservation consider that serious damage to the countryside would result if the scheme went ahead; and if the Forestry Commission is prepared to require the amendment of forestry schemes put to it for grant by private forestry interests in order to safeguard conservation interests.

Mr. John MacKay: The Nature Conservancy Council is consulted by the Forestry Commission over all applications for grant-aid for the planting of trees on sites of special scientific interest. If the council objects to a planting proposal, and the applicant is not prepared to modify or withdraw it, the Forestry Commissioners can refuse the application. On the other hand, in such circumstances the commissioners may not commit themselves to paying grant without first seeking a ministerial view.

Local Authority Expenditure

Mr. Henderson asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list the total expenditure of Scottish local authorities expressed at November 1983 prices for each of the years from 1978-79.

Mr. Ancram: The only local authority expenditure information available at November 1983 prices is expenditure relevant for rate support grant purposes, excluding loan charges. This information is set out in table A. Total local authority expenditure as shown in the 1984 public expenditure White Paper (Cmnd. 9143), adjusted by means of the GDP deflator to 1983-84 prices, is given in table B. The current expenditure figures in table B are not directly comparable with those given in table A because in the case of table B:

a. they include expenditure not relevant for rate support grant eg housing;
b. they exclude capital expenditure financed from revenue and the interest receipts deduction;
c. the 1984-85 figures are the Government-planned provision, not local authorities' budget estimates (which are above provision);
d. the price base used is different.

TABLE A

Local authority expenditure in Scotland relevant for rate support grant purposes, excluding loan charges (£ million at November 1983 prices)

1978-79	2,684
1979-80	2,716

1981-82	2,719
1982-83	2,709
1983-84	2,742
1984-85	2,753

Notes:

1. The figures for 1978-79 to 1983-84 are final or near final outturns: the figure for 1984-85 is the aggregate of authorities' budget estimates. The figure for 1978-79 has been adjusted to take account of a change in the definition of relevant expenditure as from 1979-80.
2. The figures have been revalued from cash to November 1983 prices using factors agreed with the Convention of Scottish Local Authorities. All the expenditure figures themselves, other than that for 1983-84, have been agreed with the Convention: the figure for 1983-84 is based on returns only recently received from authorities.

TABLE B

1983-84	3,100	680	3,780
1984-85	2,908	664	3,572

Note:

1. The figures for 1978-79 to 1983-84 are based on actual expenditure. The figure for 1984-85 is the Government's planned public expenditure provision.

Foetal Material

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Secretary of State for Scotland if he will list those private nursing homes and National Health Service hospitals licensed by the Scottish Home and Health Department to supply dead foetal material to National Health Service and private research institutions; what quantity of foetal material is supplied; whether a charge is made for this supply; and for what purpose foetal material is required by these research institutions.

Mr. John MacKay: Any arrangements for the supply of foetal material from NHS hospitals are the responsibility of individual health boards and no information about this is held centrally. Approved nursing homes are required to make application to my Department if they propose to supply foetal material, but no application has been submitted. A code of practice on the use of disposal of foetal material was recommended in the report in 1972 of the advisory group on the use of foetuses and foetal material for research (the Peel report).

DEFENCE

Royal Ordnance plc (Memorandum of Understanding)

Mr. Key asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will now publish the memorandum of understanding between himself and the chairman of the Royal Ordnance plc.

Mr. Butler: A copy of the memorandum of understanding has been placed in the Library on 9 January.

Army Cataloguing Authority

Mr. Jackson asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he is yet able to announce the outcome of his review of the proposed dispersal of the Army cataloguing authority to Glasgow.

Mr. Butler: Yes, I have reviewed the Glasgow dispersal package in the light of the conclusions of a recently completed study of the deployment of the Army's manning and record offices and regimental pay offices. Subject to consultation with the staff and trades unions concerned, I now propose to increase the number of posts from those offices to be dispersed to Glasgow: plans to disperse the Defence and Navy codification authorities will proceed, but the ACA will no longer be included in this dispersal package.

The overall MOD commitment to disperse at least 1,400 posts to Glasgow and the proposed time table for the dispersal programme will not be affected.

Nuclear Tests (Radiation)

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Defence whether he will publish or make available a list of the names, service, service numbers and ranks of those service personel involved in the series of nuclear tests carried out between 3 October 1952 and 23 September 1958 who constitute part of the present study by the National Radiological Protection Board.

Mr. Butler [pursuant to his reply, 21 December 1984, c. 377]: As a matter of policy, we do not publicly disclose information of this sort about present or former members of the armed forces.

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will publish or make available a list of the names, service, service number and ranks of those service personnel who were involved in incurring additional risks in the series of nuclear tests carried out between 3 October 1952 and 23 September 1958; and if he will give details of the planned special exposure level of radiation incurred by these individuals.

Mr. Butler [pursuant to his reply, 21 December 1984, c. 377]: It would be a breach of personal privacy to publish such a list. The small number of individuals involved—fewer than 30—were exposed to a whole body radiation dose greater than 70 mSv but less than 200 mSv, a range which conformed with the International Commission for Radiological Protection's recommendations and which is comparable with present-day internationally recommended limits for emergency exposures (referred to at the time of the tests as planned special exposures).

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Defence if the records of the dosages of radiation incurred by the service personnel involved in the nuclear tests carried out between 3 October 1952 and 23 September 1958, inclusive, will be made available to the National Radiological Protection Board; and if the original dosimeters and personnel film badges will also be made available to the National Radiological Protection Board.

Mr. Butler [pursuant to his reply, 21 December 1984, c. 377]: Yes. The records of exposure to radiation incurred by service personnel have been made available to the National Radiological Protection Board. The original dosimeters and personal film badges are no longer available.

Mr. Hoyle asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will give details of the appropriate protection provided to the service personnel involved in the series of nuclear tests carried out between 3 October 1952 and 23 September 1958.

Mr. Butler [pursuant to his reply, 21 December 1984, c. 377]: The protection against the effects of nuclear explosions which was provided to service personnel involved in the series of nuclear tests carried out between 3 October 1952 and 23 September 1958 varied according to the nature of their duties and of the radiation environment. Its purpose was to ensure that personnel should not be harmed by the effects of the explosion or exposed to levels of ionising radiation in excess of the prescribed limits.

At the moment of detonation, personnel were positioned at sufficient distance for the initial ionising radiation to be absorbed by the atmosphere and not reach them at a sufficient intensity to be harmful. No additional protection from the initial ionising radiation was necessary. However, personnel were required to turn their backs to the explosion in order to protect their eyes from the flash immediately following detonation. There was no need for special protection against the other effects of blast and heat at the distances at which personnel were stationed.

After detonation, where there was an operational need for personnel to enter or work in areas where there was a risk of contamination from radioactive debris, full protective clothing and respirators were used until the most hazardous areas were delineated and a lesser degree of protection would suffice. On each occasion the precise form of protection needed in each area depended on day to day assessment by the Health Physics Control. The form of protection varied with the tasks being performed.

The great majority of those involved in the test programme did not need to enter any areas of contamination and therefore did not require any special protection.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Foetal Material

Rev. Martin Smyth asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer, further to his written answer of 11 December 1984, Official Report, columns 455 and 456, whether he will instruct Her Majesty's Customs and Excise officers to investigate the exportation of dead foetal material between the United Kingdom and abroad.

Mr. Hayhoe: No.

Postpersons (Christmas Tips)

Mr. Rooker asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if the Inland Revenue has a standard system for treatment of postpersons' Christmas tips.

Mr. Hayhoe: In law, Christmas tips are part of an employee's income in the same way as his other earnings. Inspectors of taxes exercise their judgment in estimating the assessable amount of tips, using all the information available. Any employee who disagrees with the amount of tips assessed or included in his PAYE coding may appeal and if necessary have the matter heard by the independent general commissioners.

Local Authority Borrowing

Mr. Rooker asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer under what circumstances local authority borrowing adds to the money supply; and what is the current extent of such circumstances.

Mr. Ian Stewart: Local authority borrowing adds to sterling M3 when financed in such a way as to lead to the creation of private sector sterling bank deposits. When such borrowing is funded, directly or indirectly, by sales of public sector debt to the non-bank private sector, it does not add to the money supply. In the first eight months of 1984-85, net local authority borrowing was some £¾ billion. Sales of gilt-edged are not hypothecated to local authority borrowing. However, it is not possible to estimate the effect on the money supply of that borrowing. Of course local authority borrowing increases the total amount of funding required to maintain monetary control, adding to demands placed on the capital market and therefore tending to raise interest rates above what they would otherwise be.

EC (Gross Domestic Product)

Mr. Foulkes asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will publish a table showing for the last eight six-monthly periods for which figures are available, for each member state of the European Economic Community and for the European Economic Community as a whole (i) increase in nominal gross domestic product, (ii) increase in gross domestic product output volume, (iii) increase in gross domestic product price deflator, (iv) seasonally adjusted rate of unemployment, (v) surplus in trading goods and (vi) surplus in invisible goods.

Mr. Peter Rees [pursuant to his reply, 21 December 1984, c. 357]: The information required can be derived from the latest issue (No. 11, 1984) of "Eurostatistics—Data for short-term economic analysis" and CRONOS (the Eurostat data bank) for (i) increase in nominal gross domestic product, (ii) increase in gross domestic product volume, (iii) increase in gross domestic product price deflator, (v) surplus in trading goods and (vi) surplus in invisible transactions.

Item (iv) seasonally adjusted rates of unemployment for the EC and member countries are not readily available in the form requested and could be provided only at disproportionate cost. However, information on a quarterly basis for some member countries is available in OECD "Main Economic Indicators".

Copies of the publications referred to are available in the House of Commons Library. The Library also has access to the CRONOS databank.

Labour Statistics

Mr. Thurnham asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make it his policy to include in the next economic progress report a chart comparing actual unemployment figures with the figures for the relevant period predicted by independent forecasters and the assumptions for the relevant period provided by the Government to the Government Actuary.

Mr. Peter Rees [pursuant to his reply, 9 January 1985, c. 486]: A direct comparison between independent forecasts of unemployment and the assumptions provided by the Government to the Government Actuary is not possible. The Government assumptions, used for planning public expenditure, are financial year averages and relate to Great Britain, while most independent forecasters predict United Kingdom unemployment and do not provide sufficient information from which to calculate financial year averages. Comparisons between forecasts or assumptions and actual unemployment figures are affected by changes in the method of counting unemployment, introduced at the end of 1982, and by the provisions, announced in the 1983 Budget, which removed the requirement for some men over 60 to sign at unemployment offices. Therefore, I do not propose to publish the chart requested. However, the following is a table of comparisons.

EC Budget

Mr. Spearing asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will tabulate in the Official Report the expenditure of the European Economic Communities for 1984 authorised prior to the introduction of Supplementary Budget No. 1, together with the expenditure authorised by that budget, for each main purpose and under subheadings of obligatory and non-obligatory expenditure, respectively.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 9 January 1985, c. 487]: The information requested is given in the following table. It has been extracted from Official Journals Nos. L329 of 1984 (supplementary budget) and L12 of 1984 (1984 budget) which are both available from the House of Commons Library. The information given is in millions of ecus and commitment and payment appropriations are shown separately.

£1 Note

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will consider introducing a higher denomination note, such as a £2·50 note, to replace the £1 note.

Mr. Ian Stewart [pursuant to his reply, 9 January 1985, c. 486]: The case for a higher denomination note, between £1 and £5, was fully considered before the introduction of the £1 coin and the decision to replace the £1 note. But recent experience of double unit notes, for example in the USA and France, does not suggest that it would be justified. The current purchasing power of £2·50 is approximately the same as that of the 10s note when it was withdrawn in 1970.

Construction Industry

Mr. Rooker asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer if he will make a statement on the contribution of the construction industry to the economy in respect of gross domestic product, employment, exports and tax revenue, including building materials producers where appropriate; and how the position compares with five and 10 years previously.

Mr. Peter Rees [pursuant to his reply, 9 January 1985, c. 487]: The following table gives the figures requested in terms of the percentage contribution of the construction industry (and, where this information is available, building materials producers) to the relevant totals.

	1973 per cent.	1978 per cent.	1983 per cent.

Books (Prosecutions)

Mr. Dobson asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how many prosecutions have been mounted by Her Majesty's Customs and Excise since 1979 against books listed in the edition of British Books in Print current at the time of prosecution.

Mr. Hayhoe [pursuant to his reply, 9 January 1985, c. 488]: This information could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

ENVIRONMENT

Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list those sites where the Nature Conservancy Council considers there has been a breach of section 28(5) of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981; and which are the subject of prosecutions or legal proceedings.

Mr. Gow: Two prosecutions under section 28(5) have been concluded in respect of sites at Ulverscroft Valley, Leicestershire and Gwennydd Yr Afon Fach, Dyfed. Proceedings are in progress in respect of a site at Broadstone Meadow, Hereford and Worcestershire. In a further case in Scotland, the procurator fiscal decided not to proceed.

It would not be appropriate to publicise information about possible breaches of section 28(5), as this might prejudice any eventual legal action.

Sites of Special Scientific Interest

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will list in the Official Report the 156 sites of special scientific interest reported by the Nature Conservancy Council in its 10th annual report as damaged or destroyed.

Mr. Gow: I shall write to the hon. Member as soon as possible.

National Heritage Memorial Fund

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how many requests for assistance have been received by the National Heritage Memorial Fund each year since 1980; and if he will list those that were unsuccessful and failed to attract support from the fund.

Mr. Macfarlane: For each of the last four years the total number of applications and those that were unsuccessful was as follows. The NHMF does not release details of unsuccessful applications:

	Total applications	Unsuccessful
1980-81	181	135
1981-82	228	148
1982-83	234	143
1983-84	274	165

Housing Corporation

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment how the allocation of resources to the Housing Corporation for 1985-86 compares in real terms with the previous four years.

Mr. Gow: Public expenditure resource provision for the Housing Corporation for 1985-86, compared with outturn for the previous four years is as follows:

Housing Corporation: Net Provision for Housing Association Development

£ million

	Cash	1985-86 Prices
1981-82 Out turn	492	607
1982-83 Out turn	680	787
1983-84 Out turn	624	688
1984-85 Forecast Out turn	617	648
1985-86 Provision	605	605

The corporation's gross capital expenditure, comprising the above net provision plus receipts from sales of properties and loan repayments, is as follows:

Housing Corporation: Gross capital expenditure

£ million

	Cash	1985-86 Prices
1981-82 Out turn	548	676
1982-83 Out turn	755	874
1983-84 Out turn	734	809
1984-85 Forecast Out turn	687	721
1985-86 Provision	685	685

Local Authorities (Capital Receipts)

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement setting out the information the Government obtain in relation to the use of both spent and unspent capital receipts of local authorities.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Central Government do not collect information on the use which local authorities make of their capital receipts. So far as housing capital expenditure and capital receipts for 1983-84 are concerned, I refer the hon. Gentleman to the reply given by my hon. Friend the Minister for Housing and Construction to my hon. Friend the Member for Mid-Staffordshire (Mr. Heddle) on 20 July 1984, at column 360.

Written Answers to Questions

Friday 11 January 1985

EMPLOYMENT

Technical and Vocational Education Initiative

Mr. Andrew F. Bennett asked the Secretary of State for Employment what is the expenditure per pupil for those involved in the technical and vocational education initiative.

Mr. Peter Morrison: The total projected cost to the Manpower Services Commission of the first 62 projects under the technical and vocational education initiative is some £150 million. These provide for some 62,000 entrants, which gives an average cost over the period of the experiment of some £2,400 per entrant. This includes substantial initial non-recurrent development costs but excludes local authority costs.

TRANSPORT

Coal Imports

Mr. Merchant asked the Secretary of State for Transport what is the total capacity for the import of coal at British ports.

Mr. David Mitchell: No meaningful estimate can be made of the total coal importing capacity at British ports given the variety of types and sizes of facilities which could handle such traffic.

Motor Rallies

Dr. David Clark asked the Secretary of State for Transport if he will introduce legislation to clarify sections 14 and 35 of the Road Traffic Act 1972 concerning motor rallies on public rights of way; and whether in the meantime he will issue a departmental circular to local authorities reminding them of the correct procedures for the authorisation of such rallies.

Mrs. Chalker: Consideration is being given at present to the relationship between sections 14 and 35 of the Road Traffic Act 1972. If clarification is needed, legislation will be introduced when a suitable opportunity occurs. Advice to local authorities, in the form of a circular roads, would be premature at this time.

PRIME MINISTER

Research and Development

Mr. Dalyell asked the Prime Minister if she will publish the Cabinet Office figures for 1979 and each year until 1984, and the projections for each year 1985 until 1990, giving the total of civilian and military research and development expenditure.

The Prime Minister: The information requested is published in the "Annual Review of Government Funded Research and Development 1984", HMSO, ISBN 011 630826 5, table 2.1, for the years 1981-82 to 1986-87. No projections are available for the years after 1986-87, the last year covered by the most recent public expenditure survey. Similar material for the period before that covered by the Cabinet Office exercise, collected for statistical purposes by the Department of Trade and Industry, has been published in the article "Research and Development in the United Kingdom in 1981", Economic Trends, August 1984, p. 81-96, table B.

AGRICULTURE, FISHERIES AND FOOD

Oslo and Paris Commissions

Mr. Charles Morrison asked the Minister of Agriculture, Fisheries and Food what steps have been taken to mark the end of the first 10 years of the Oslo and Paris commissions.

Mr. MacGregor: A book entitled "The Oslo and Paris Commissions: The First Decade — International Co-operation in Protecting Our Marine Environment" has been published by the Oslo and Paris Secretariat, New Court, 48 Carey Street, London WC2A 2JE. I have placed a copy in the Library of the House.

The book records the history of, and progress made by, the commissions over the past 10 years and contains chapters on the national policies of the contracting parties towards waste management and waste disposal. The depositing of wastes in the sea and the discharging of wastes from the land to the aquatic environment are considered in the context of overall national waste disposal strategies.

ENVIRONMENT

Housing Corporation

Mr. Rooker asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what account the allocation of resources to the Housing Corporation announced on 18 December takes of the imposition of value added tax on building alterations.

Mr. Gow: The announcement on 18 December of the provision of net capital resources for the Housing Corporation of £605 million plus estimated capital receipts of £80 million takes full account of the effect of value added tax. I shall be announcing shortly the breakdown of the Housing Corporation's approved development programme.

Falkland Islands

Mr. Holt asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will make a statement on the progress of the airfield at Mount Pleasant in the Falkland Islands.

Mr. Patrick Jenkin: Excellent progress has been made with the work during 1984 as hon. Members who have visited the site in the last few months will know. Provided there is reasonable weather during the current Falklands summer, there is every prospect that the time lost because of the two dock strikes last year will be recovered and that the main runway will be ready on schedule at the end of April. I pay tribute to all concerned with the project, the management and work force of the contractor (the Laing-Mowlem-Amey Roadstone Construction joint venture), PSA and its consultants, for what they have achieved so far.

Rating (Disabled Persons)

Mr. Alfred Morris asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what is his estimate of the number of people who obtained relief under section 1 of the Rating (Disabled Persons) Act 1978 in the last year for which figures are available; and what was the average rate reduction in each case.

Mr. Kenneth Baker: Figures for years prior to 1983-84 are not available in the detail requested, and for that year complete figures are not yet available. By the end of December 1984 292 of 367 local authorities concerned in England had made final claims for rate payments towards mandatory relief under section 1 of the Rating (Disabled Persons) Act 1978. In those authorities 65,889 households had received relief totalling £6,029,747, an average per household of £91·51.

Centre 21, Enderby

Mr. Peter Bruinvels asked the Secretary of State for the Environment if he will now give his reasons for ordering a new inquiry into the proposed superstore Centre 21, at Enderby, Leicestershire.

Mr. Macfarlane: The inquiry is to be reopened so that differing estimates of the impact of the proposals on central Leicester can be examined in detail before the appeal is redetermined.

Rye Harbour

Mr. Warren asked the Secretary of State for the Environment what consultations took place with his Department before 25 acres of the Rye harbour site of special scientific interest were bulldozed and drained in 1983; whether he is considering restoration of the site of special scientific interest; and if he will make a statement on the future protection of this site.

Mr. Gow: The Rye harbour SSSI, which was first notified under the provisions of the National Parks and Access to the Countryside Act 1949, has been afforded the fuller statutory protection of the Wildlife and Countryside Act 1981 since September 1984, when the Nature Conservancy Council gave notice of the scientific interest of the site to landowners and occupiers.

Prior to the re-notification of the site landowners and occupiers were not obliged to consult the Nature Conservancy Council before carrying out work. However I understand that although some damage occurred before the site was re-notified, it was not severe and should not have any lasting effect. The site is now fully protected as a SSSI.

HOME DEPARTMENT

Drug Addicts

Mr. Amess asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what is the number of registered drug addicts in (a) England and Wales and (b) Essex and Basildon; and what steps he is taking to reduce these figures.

Mr. Mellor: The latest available information on narcotic drug addicts notified to the Home Office in England and Wales and Essex relates to 1983 and is given in Tables 3.11-3.13 of "Statistics of the Misuse of Drugs, United Kingdom, Supplementary Tables", a copy of which is in the Library of the House. Corresponding figures for Basildon could be provided only at disproportionate cost.

In regard to the final part of the question, I refer my hon. Friend to the reply I gave to a question from my hon. Friend the Member for Enfield, North (Mr. Eggar) on 22 November 1984, at column 397-98.

Police Officers (NHS and Dental Treatment)

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department why police officers are reimbursed the cost of National Health Service prescriptions and dental treatment.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Before the introduction of the National Health Service, police officers were provided with free medical and dental treatment as part of their conditions of service. When NHS charges were first introduced, it was agreed that police officers should not be required to pay for treatment to which they had previously been entitled free of charge. Provision was therefore made in the police regulations for reimbursement of the costs of NHS prescriptions and dental treatment.

Coal Industry Dispute (Policing)

Sir Geoffrey Finsberg asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department how many man-days have been worked by the Metropolitan police on duties in the coalfield areas since their first duties there; and how many complaints about their behaviour have been made in the same period.

Mr. Giles Shaw: Between 14 March and 31 December 1984, aid provided by the Metropolitan police to other police forces in connection with the miners' dispute has amounted to some 204,000 man days.

During the same period, 11 complaints under section 49 of the Police Act 1964 have been received by the Metropolitan police against their officers arising from duties in mining areas.

Immigration

Mr. Mark Carlisle asked the Secretary of State for the Home Department what changes he proposes to introduce in the immigration appeals system following consideration of comments on the discussion document "Review of Appeals under the Immigration Act 1971."

Mr. Brittan: The primary aim of the Government's review was to identify ways of reducing the unacceptable delays in the appeals system. Over the period of the review, however, delays have been greatly reduced. At the end of November 1984 the number of appeals awaiting hearing was about 9,500 compared with 16,350 at the end of 1979, and the average delay in the hearing centres was reduced, over the same period, from 14 months to three to four months. The objective of the review has therefore largely been achieved. We do not propose at this time to introduce any changes in rights of appeal, for example for illegal entrants before removal, although this will be considered when a suitable opportunity presents itself to amend the Immigration Act 1971. In the meantime there are a number of minor and tidying up changes which it is proposed to make to the Immigration Appeals (Procedure) Rules 1972 and the Immigration Appeals (Notices) Regulations 1972; and revised rules and regulations, both of which are subject to negative resolution of both Houses, will be laid shortly. These changes have the support of the appellate authorities.

EDUCATION AND SCIENCE

Rutherford-Appleton Laboratory

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Education and Science when he expects to receive the report of the review group on the Rutherford-Appleton laboratory; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Brooke: No such review group exists.

DEFENCE

Type 22 Frigates

Mr Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence when he intends to make a decision about orders for two type 22 Broadsword class frigates.

Mr. Lee: A decision on the placing of orders for a further two type 22 frigates will be taken as soon as possible.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest cost estimate of a type 22 frigate, with stores, spare parts and ammunition.

Mr. Lee: The average cost of a batch III type 22 frigate is currently estimated at about £140 million at 1984-85 prices. The cost of embarked helicopters, the first outfit of stores, spare parts and ammunition are estimated at about £18 million at the same price level.

Type 23 Frigates

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the estimated cost of a type 23 Duke class frigate in 1981.

Mr. Lee: The average cost of the type 23 frigate, as then envisaged, was estimated at £75 million at September 1980 prices. This is equivalent to £103 million at 1984-85 prices.

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the latest cost estimate of a type 23 Duke class frigate.

Mr. Lee: The average cost of the type 23 frigate is currently estimated at £110 million at 1984-85 prices. This includes the cost of design changes judged necessary as a result of lessons learned from the Falklands campaign.

Mr. Dalyell: asked the Secretary of State for Defence how many type 23 frigates will be ordered.

Mr. Lee: No decision has been taken on the number of type 23 frigates to be built.

Nimrod Radar Programme

Mr. Dalyell: asked the Secretary of State for Defence what is the overrun in the Nimrod airborne radar programme; and how many months this programme is behind schedule.

Mr. Butler: Because of difficulties with the radar, the Nimrod AEW aircraft did not enter service in 1984 as we had announced in the "Statement on the Defence Estimates 1984" (Cmnd 9227-I). We are assessing the various options for bringing the project to completion. Until a way forward has been agreed, it is not possible to determine by how much in real terms the project will exceed original estimates, nor by how long the programme as a whole will be delayed.

RAF Budget

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence what was the overspend in the Royal Air Force budget in 1984-85 to date; and what is the projected overspend in 1985-86.

Mr. Butler: There is no separate budget for the Royal Air Force, but a single defence block budget. Overall defence expenditure for 1984-85 is expected to be contained within the cash provision. The Defence Estimates for 1985-86 will be presented to Parliament this spring.

Ocean-going Tug (Sinking)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Defence if he will make a statement about the sinking of an ocean-going tug off the Isle of Wight on 24 December 1984 on its way to the Falklands.

Mr. Stanley [pursuant to his reply, 9 January 1984, c. 460]: MV Implacable, an ocean-going tug, was chartered last year for use on naval tasks in the Falkland Islands. On her way to the south Atlantic the vessel capsized off the Isle of Wight on 24 December. I regret to say that the chief engineer is missing, presumed drowned. The rest of the crew were rescued. There were no Ministry of Defence personnel on board. An investigation into the loss is being conducted by the marine directorate of the Department of Transport.

NATIONAL FINANCE

Intra-Community Travel Allowances

Mr. John David Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer what information Her Majesty's Government have relating to the request by the Republic of Ireland for a further derogation from the European Economic Community directive relating to intra-Community travel allowances; if the Government support this request and if he will make a statement on the implication of this derogation for United Kingdom towns near the Irish border.

Mr. Lawson: At the meeting of the Internal Market Council on 18 December 1984, a compromise proposal to raise the value of both the intra-Community travel allowance and the Irish derogation was considered; but it was withdrawn in the face of opposition by certain Member States. The United Kingdom would have been prepared to agree to this proposal.

As regards the remainder of the Question I refer the right hon. Member to the answer I gave him on 12 April last year at column 149.

EC (Contributions)

Mr. Teddy Taylor asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer how the net amount to be contributed by the United Kingdom to the Common Market in 1985 and 1986 will compare with the net amount contributed in 1984 on the assumption that the resources of the EEC are increased in accordance with the Council of Ministers' recommendation.

Mr. Ian Stewart: I shall let my hon. Friend have a reply as soon as possible.

Taxation

Dr. McDonald asked the Chancellor of the Exchequer whether he will publish the latest estimates of the real change in taxes, rates and national insurance in 1984-85 compared with 1978-79 broken down (a) into the following categories: (i) income tax, (ii) corporation tax, (iii) North sea taxes, (iv) capital taxes and stamp duty, (v) national insurance contributions, employees (vi) national insurance contributions, employers, (vii) national insurance surcharge, (viii) local authority rates and (ix) taxes on expenditure; and (b) to show the division of changes in income tax between (i) taxes on investment income and (ii) taxes on those in the lower and upper deciles and in the four quartiles of tax units ranked by income.

Mr. Moore [pursuant to his reply, 20 December 1984]: The available information is in the table. It is not possible to split the figure for the change in income tax revenue in the way requested.

NORTHERN IRELAND

Northern Ireland Housing Executive (Rent Arrears)

Mr. J. Enoch Powell asked the Secretary of State for Northern Ireland whether the published total of rent arrears due to the Northern Ireland Housing Executive includes sums deemed due in arrears on behalf of its tenants under arrangements with the social security authorities; and what proportion of the total arrears those sums represent.

Dr. Boyson: I understand from the chairman of the Northern Ireland Housing Executive that about 4 per cent. (£800,000) of the total rent, rates and district heating arrears owed by tenants at 30 September 1984 was collected under current arrangements with the Department of Health and Social Services. It had not, however, been paid over to the Housing Executive at that date.

FOREIGN AND COMMONWEALTH AFFAIRS

Medical Equipment and Aids (Overseas Sales)

Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what steps have been taken by the British Embassy in Paris to help United Kingdom manufacturers of medical equipment and aids for the handicapped to sell their products.

Mr. Rifkind: The embassy at Paris has been active in support of a task force on medical equipment and aids for the handicapped which was launched in October 1983 by the European trade committee, an area advisory group of the British Overseas Trade Board.

The embassy was involved in the organisation of an inward trade mission in March 1984, when representatives of five French health care organisations visited the United Kingdom for five days. In November, a presentation of medical equipment and aids for the handicapped manufactured by 10 British firms was mounted at the Paris residence of Her Majesty's ambassador. The British Health-Care Export Council and the participating firms consider the presentation to have been an outstanding success.

Exhibitions, China

Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many times the staff of the commercial section in Peking visited the exhibitions in Tianjin, China, that took place from 29 November to 4 December.

Mr. Rifkind: Two members of the commercial department of Her Majesty's embassy, Peking attended the opening day (29 November) of the electric power and water exposition in Tianjin, China. They met the British exhibitors before the opening ceremony, attended the ceremony, escorted the Chinese dignitaries through the British stands and talked to the British exhibitors over lunch and in the afternoon at the exhibition. The commercial department of the embassy also assisted and briefed those exhibitors who contacted them at the embassy during or after the exhibition.

Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs how many British companies exhibited at the energy exhibition in Tianjin, China, from 29 November to 4 December.

Mr. Rifkind: Nineteen British firms, including one major engineering company and five of its manufacturing subsidiaries, exhibited at the electric power and water exposition in Tianjin, China. Their participation was organised jointly by the Federation of British Electrotechnical and Allied Manufacturers' Associations and the British Overseas Trade Board.

Mr. E. Barlow (South African Sports Office)

Mr. Robert Hughes asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs if Her Majesty's Government have received any request for diplomatic status to be given to Mr. E. Barlow, the Director of the South African Sports Office.

Mr. Rifkind: No.

British Embassy, Peking

Mr. Richard Page asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what is the number of staff in the British Embassy in Peking; and how they are deployed.

Mr. Rifkind: There are 38 United Kingdom based staff and 47 locally engaged staff in the British Embassy in Peking. The breakdown by Department is:

Ambassador

Counsellor
Two First Secretaries
One Second Secretary
One Second Secretary (also employed on information work)

Soviet Union (Treaties and Agreements)

Mr. Wood asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what treaties and agreements have been signed with the Soviet Union since 1955.

Falkland Islands (Fishing)

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Foreign and Commonwealth Affairs what notice he has been given by the Governments of (a) Japan and (b) Taiwan about fishing in 1985 in Falkland waters; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Rifkind: No such notice has been received from either Government.

TRADE AND INDUSTRY

Gallium Arsenide Microchips

Mr. Ashdown asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry what plans he has and what consideration he is giving to assisting with the research and production of gallium arsenide microchips.

Mr. Butcher: Government assistance for research and development and production investment of gallium arsenide integrated circuits has been provided for under the microelectronics industry support programme 2.

The majority of the market for integrated circuits will continue to be satisfied by silicon devices which, accordingly, remain the major priority for assistance under MISP 2. However, because of the importance of the high speed and optical properties of integrated circuits made from gallium arsenide and similar materials, assistance has been earmarked for projects in this area.

Proposals for assistance have been received from three companies and several more are expected.

Support is also being given for research and development in this broad area through the joint opto-electronics research scheme and, indirectly, the ESPRIT programme.

Manufacturing

Mr. Deakins asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry how he defines productivity in manufacturing industry; and what statistics are used to assess changes in such productivity.

Mr. Butcher: The definitions of productivity in manufacturing refer only to labour productivity. This is defined as either output per person, in which manufacturing output is divided by the employed labour force in manufacturing, or output per person hour in which an adjustment is made for the number of hours worked. Statistics are readily available for productivity on both definitions. Further information is available in the CSO occasional paper "Output Per Person Hour in Manufacturing" (CSO output measures occasional paper number 15). A copy of this publication is in the Library of the House.

Astronomy Satellite

Mr. Dalyell asked the Secretary of State for Trade and Industry if he will make a statement on the meeting of the Minister of State for Information Technology and James Beggs, Director of National Aeronautics and Space Administration, in relation to the future of IRAS, and possible participation in the European infra-red space observatory in 1992.

Mr. Butcher: Mr. Beggs was in the United Kingdom only briefly on 13 and 14 December to present NASA awards in connection with the very successful infra-red astronomy satellite mission. Mr. Beggs then had a short social meeting with my hon. Friend. Their discussion touched on a number of space matters, including possible British participation in the international space station programme but not the particular science projects referred to by the hon. Member. My hon. Friend hopes to meet Mr. Beggs again in Washington later this month.

SOCIAL SERVICES

Local Office Staffs

Mr. Nicholas Brown asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what has been the ratio of staff to work load in his Department's offices at Saxon house, East Newcastle and the Green, Wallsend, by year over the past 10 years; and if he will give the total staffing figures for the past 10 years, by year, and the annual number of claimants.

Mr. Whitney: The Departmental local office complementing system — a guide to which is in the Library—provides for the determination of local office complements, that is the number of staff required to deal with the estimated continuing work load, and their adjustment as work load levels change.

I regret that statistics in the form requested on the number of claimants over the last 10 years at the local offices mentioned could be obtained only at disproportionate cost. In addition, comparison between numbers of staff and claimants would be misleading as workloads vary considerably by type and duration of claim and the action that has to be taken. All these factors vary over time and as a result of legislative, policy and procedural changes.

Mobility Allowance

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what advice is given to examining medical officers on the virtually-unable-to-walk eligibility requirement for mobility allowance.

Mr. Newton: I refer my hon. Friend to my reply to the hon. Member for Huddersfield (Mr. Sheerman) on 21 November at column 203.

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many deaf-blind people are currently in receipt of mobility allowance; how many have appealed after an initial refusal; how many have succeeded on appeal; and what are these figures on geographical basis.

Mr. Newton: I regret that this information is not available.

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the estimated cost of extending mobility allowance to (a) all deaf-blind people and (b) deaf-blind people between the ages of five and 65 years.

Mr. Newton: I regret that information on which to base an estimate is not available.

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for Social Services if, in the light of the Oglesby report, he is looking at ways in which medical reports on mobility allowance claims could be simplified and used by the claimant's own doctor.

Mr. Newton: We are still considering this recommendation.

Deaf-blind People

Mr. Hannam asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many people are deaf-blind; and how many are aged between five and 65 years.

Mr. Newton: As at 31 March 1982, the latest date for which information is centrally available, the number of people in England registered as blind and deaf was as follows:

Age	Number
Under 5	2
5-64	351
65 and over	1,510
Total	1,863

Benefits Reviews

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services when he expects the reviews being undertaken on pensions, housing benefit and supplementary benefit to be completed.

Mr. Newton: We will be publishing our conclusions and proposals for change as soon as we are in a position to do so.

Back Pain and Injury

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services why back pain and back injury are not included as a prescribed disease in the industrial injury provision of the Social Services Act 1975; and if he will make a statement.

Mr. Newton: In its review of the schedule of prescribed industrial diseases (Cmnd. 8393) the Industrial Injuries Advisory Council concluded that prescription would not be appropriate for back pain since this was a symptom rather than a specific clinical condition or an effect of exposure to certain substances. Claims in respect of back pain and back injury may, however, be successful under the accident provisions of the industrial injuries scheme.

Industrial Injury Benefit Scheme Claims

Mrs. Virginia Bottomley asked the Secretary of State for Social Services how many industrial injury benefit scheme claims have been received by his Department in each of the last five years from National Health Service employees; and of these how many were successful.

Mr. Newton: I regret this information is not available centrally and could be obtained only at disproportionate cost.

Striking Miners (Benefits)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services, in comparable terms, what are the levels of supplementary benefit presently allocated to the families of striking miners; and what were the levels paid in similar circumstances in 1974.

Mr. Newton: Levels of supplementary benefit payable for the families of strikers depend on individual circumstances, taking account of any other family income. The rules which apply to such payments have changed since 1974 and it is not possible to provide figures showing amounts of benefit paid in exactly comparable terms. One of the main changes is that help with rent and rates is now provided by a separate housing benefit, whereas in 1974 housing costs were covered by supplementary benefit. Another major change, since 1980, is that a specified sum (currently £16) is now deducted from the supplementary benefit requirements of families of strikers.

For illustrative purposes, some examples of supplementary benefit scale-rates which applied to strikers' families in 1974 and their equivalents at the present time are shown in the table. Housing requirements have been excluded and the £16 specified sum has been deducted from the 1984 figures.

	February 1974 scale-rates £	February 1974 scale-rates at 1984 values* £	November 1984† scale-rates less specified sum £
Wife only	5·70	19·49	6·45
Wife plus one child under five years	7·75	26·51	16·05
Wife plus two children aged 11 years and 15 years	12·40	42·41	35·15

* Amounts increased in line with increases in the Retail Price Index (less housing costs) from February 1974 to November 1984.
† Scale-rates effect from 26 November 1984 after deduction of the £16 specified sum.

Attendance Allowance

Mr. Stern asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what steps were taken by his Department to enforce the requirement that recipients of attendance allowances notify his Department when they move from private accommodation to residential accommodation which is provided by or with the help of a public or local authority.

Mr. Newton: A claimant who fails to notify the Department of a change of circumstances which affects his entitlement to attendance allowance may be liable to prosecution and, subject to the decision of the adjudication authorities, be required to repay any sums to which he is found not to have been entitled.

Veterinary Waste Disposal

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what investigations have been conducted by his Department into the health hazards arising from haphazard veterinary waste disposal methods.

Mr. John Patten: None, but the problem of veterinary waste disposal is discussed in waste management paper No. 25 "Clinical Waste", published in 1983 by my right hon. Friend the Secretary of State for the Environment.

Hospitals (Energy Consumption)

Mrs. Renée Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what specific guidelines he has issued to hospitals about energy consumption during the last three years.

Mr. John Patten: During the last three years, the Department has issued guidelines to health authorities on a number of energy conservation measures including recovering waste heat from incinerators and in laundries, minimising heat losses in hot water systems, energy management systems, replacement of inefficient boilers, thermal insulation of buildings and appropriate engineering services, small-scale combined heat and power plants and checks on energy saving effectiveness. A computer program has been made available for making decisions locally, when planning long-term investment in energy saving measures.

Regional health authorities have been provided with an analysis of the energy consumed in their districts over a seven year period ending 1981-82, together with the national average figures to assist them in their monitoring role.

The Department is working with the relevant regional health authorities on the development of low energy hospitals on the Isle of Wight and at Ashington, Northumberland, from which lessons can be learned for more general application.

Benefits

Ms. Clare Short asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what information he has on the costs of supplementary benefit, housing benefit and unemployment benefit to 16 and 17-year-olds.

Mr. Newton: Approximate, estimated expenditure for 16 and 17-year-olds in 1983-84 was as follows:

	£ million
Supplementary benefit*	200
Housing benefit	10
Unemployment benefit	17

Mr. Sheerman asked the Secretary of State for Social Services what is the total amount of benefit claimed by, and in respect of, unemployed 16 and 17-year-olds; and how that amount is distributed between the various classes of claim.

Mr. Newton [pursuant to his reply, 9 January, c. 506]: Estimated total benefit expenditure on unemployed 16 and 17-year-olds in 1983-84 was £225 million (rounded). This breaks down approximately as follows:

	£ million
Supplementary benefit*	185
Unemployment benefit	17
Housing benefit	10
Child benefit	15

INDEX TO THE

PARLIAMENTARY DEBATES

OFFICIAL REPORT

SIXTH SERIES VOLUME 70

SESSION 1984-85

17th December 1984—11th January 1985

SCOPE OF THE INDEX, ARRANGEMENT AND ABBREVIATIONS

This index is derived from the House of Commons Library's Parliamentary On-Line Information System (POLIS), and the subject terms used are based on those used in POLIS. There are often changes in column numbering, etc., between the daily part or weekly Hansard (which simply collects together the daily parts without revision) and the bound volume. The index for the bound volume is revised to take account of these changes.

Scope and arrangement of the Index

Oral and Written Parliamentary Questions are indexed under subject headings and the names of Members asking and Ministers replying to them. Questions are not listed under the names of Departments replying. Departmental listings can be arrived at indirectly by looking under the names of the Minister(s) of that Department. There will, however, be headings 'Northern Ireland', 'Scotland', and 'Wales' under which one will find not only most Questions answered by the Northern Ireland Office, Scottish Office, Welsh Office but also Questions about these areas of the United Kingdom which are answered by other Departments. Ministerial statements are indexed under subject headings, under 'Ministerial statements' and the names of Ministers making them and Members speaking on them. General debates are indexed under broad subject headings and under the names of all Members and Ministers taking part. Debates on legislation (Bills, Orders, Regulations etc.) are indexed under the name of the Bill, Statutory Instrument etc., under subject headings and under the names of those taking part.

Rulings and Statements by Mr. Speaker and his deputies are brought together under the heading 'Speakers ruling and statement'.

Other contributions by Mr. Speaker and his deputies appear under the heading 'Speaker'.

Opposition Day Debates, Estimates Day Debates and Standing Order No. 10 applications are listed under those respective headings and under subject headings too.

The date of each item except Parliamentary Questions is inserted immediately before the reference.

Members' names are given in the form by which they prefer to be known and are printed in bold italics. Under their names, entries are arranged under one of the two headings Debates etc. (to include interventions on statements, points of order and so on) or Questions.

Abbreviations

Bills 1R=first reading, 2R=second reading, Money res=money resolution, Com=Committee stage, Rep=Report stage, 3R=third reading, amendt/amendts=amendment/amendments, *=matter taken formally, without debate.

Column numbers followed by the letter W refer to Written Questions. These appear at the end of the volume with their own sequence of column numbers printed in italics.
